My original position on the non-existent virus by Jon Rappoport

About a year ago, I wrote and published my position on the existence of SARS-CoV-2.

I still stand by it.

It's worth revisiting. File it under:
"follow the actual science."

If researchers had actually been interested in proving the virus exists, they would have conducted a large-scale study. Here it is.

Take 500 people who have been diagnosed with the pandemic disease, line them up, and take swab samples from them.

Using correct and meticulous procedures, which involve centrifuging those samples, produce 500 clear electron microscope photos—one good photo for each sample.

Place the 500 photos side by side, and answer the following questions:

One: In each and every photo, do you see MANY particles of what is unmistakably a virus?

Two: In each and every photo, are these particles the same virus?

Three: Are these particles of a virus you've never seen before?

If you answer any of the three questions with a no, you go back to the drawing board. Your attempt to prove the existence of a new virus which is causing disease has failed. (You might have shown a new virus exists, but it is non-relevant, because you haven't shown it is causing disease.)

If you answered yes to the three questions, you bring in a new team of researchers, who enroll a new group of 500 volunteers who have been diagnosed with the pandemic disease, and they conduct the same experiment. Why? Because confirmation of results by an independent group is part of what is called the scientific method. At one time, every high school student was taught the scientific method.

If this new group of researchers carries out the study and answers no to any of the three questions, the attempt to prove a new virus exists and is causing disease has failed.

If the new group answers yes to the three questions, a third group of researchers would enlist 500 new volunteers and carry out the test once again. This would constitute further confirmation.

If this third group answers yes to the three questions, then you have strong evidence. (Of course, the electron microscope is registering dead virus. It isn't looking at viruses in action or motion in the body. So it isn't infallible.)

Now you see the futility of claiming that samples taken from one, two, or three patients in a study prove anything at all.

Correct studies of this kind should always use large numbers of people. For example, what would you say to the clinical trial of a new drug that only enlisted three people as volunteers? Would the outcome be sufficient to apply for FDA approval of the drug? Of course not.

The large-scale study—with confirmation—I've described above has never been done in the case of "COVID-19."

Therefore, no proof exists that SARS-CoV-2 is real and is causing disease.

The burden of proof rests with the researchers who assert that SARS-CoV-2 is real and is the cause of a pandemic.

They have told that story. Since their story can't be backed up, there is no reason to believe in the existence of SARS-CoV-2.

I could say a new measles virus or a new hepatitis virus or a new virus from outer space is causing a pandemic, but that, too, would just be a story.

I recently entered the other side of the narrative when I had to succumb to the role of inpatient. I tried to refuse the Covid test and was hated for it as new restrictions were put in place and I was forced to wear a mask and not wander out of my isolation room. I had pneumonia. I felt like a prisoner of war as the staff glared at me in carefully constructed expressions of disgust on their faces. Then I decided to capitulate and let them test (otherwise I feared for my reputation in my town). Thankfully it came back negative. The psychological pain of being despised as a patient hit hard, as if I were a really bad person for trying to refuse a Covid swab. It's a wonder I was not held down and forced.

In the gamzuletova.org site, under Season 1, Video A, there are several experts dissecting the fallacies of HIV diagnoses. Kary Mullis weighs in at 2m10sec sharing his observations of the presumptive $cience behind HIV.

Mullis of course was the inventor of the PCR test that has become the Gold Standard for testing in the Putative COVID Pandemic. (He called Bullsh*t on using his PCR Test to test for COVID19.)

I've got a better idea.

- 1) Make up a random genetic sequence that appears at a relatively predictable frequency in everyone and can test positive or negative depending on the PCR cycle count.
- 2) Declare a pandemic and shut down the economy.
- 3) Test everyone and insist that the healthy ones who tested positive are dangerous “asymptomatic carriers of the disease.”
- 4) Smear any traditional treatments for common respiratory problems (HCQ, Ivermectin).
- 5) Declare God a fool and regard the large opening he put on every animal’s face to be nothing more than an entry/exit point for viruses and in need of a cloth filter.
- 6) Don’t allow people to visit, much less touch, their friends and family.
- 7) Produce 24/7 fear porn on every imaginable wavelength.
- 8) Financially reward “healthcare” providers for finding COVID in healthy, sick, and dead people.
- 9) Drive enthusiasm for dangerous gene therapy “vaccines” and eventually exclude anyone from society who refuses to take them.
- 10) Make vaccines a seasonal responsibility for everyone.

[EMPHASIS mine]

Late last night, I watched a re-broadcast on C-SPAN of a HOR Energy & Commerce Subcommittee.

The most common issue was increasing vaccinations.

It was chaired by Diana DeGette (D-CO) & both party members asked questions of:

Dr. Fauci (NIAID Director);
Dr. Rochelle Walensky (CDC Director);
Dr. Peter Marks (CBER Director at FDA).

It was late at night. My house was quiet & this quiet augmented focus. I watched carefully, listened to questions & their answers carefully.

Most often, the precise question was NEVER answered.

Often, it was simply bypassed for some politico-speak, which many Rep's also engaged in, via their formatting of questions.

In my opinion, people at this level, are truly NOT INTERESTED in anything other than their pre-prescribed agenda.

NOR, do they seem to me, to bother to carry, any BURDEN of responsibility.

They are actors. All. Ever.

Right now, I'm watching C-SPAN Morning Journal featuring Nicolas Florko (STAT News). He's doing a re-cap of yesterday's meeting.

I don't know if he's a MD, but he's advocating the vaccine like he's freakin' Florence Nightingale!

Paul, I liked your post very much but as a former nurse who trained in England I would like point out that Florence Nightingale was a firm believer in Terrain theory rather than germ theory (from her observations of her many patients). She claimed that bacterial infections came from within the debilitated patient's body and claimed that the illness passed through stages that corresponded to a bacterial stage and a viral stage. She was a firm believer in fresh air and sunshine and good nutrition for healing and the power of psychology . If the patient felt "well-cared for", they would recover more quickly. In those days it was the best trained nurses that were responsible for the freshness of the wards and comfort of the patients and they spent more time holding the patient's hand than they did composing copious notes and delegating the important work of total patient care to others, whether experts or not. ie. Practical nursing was valued more than the theoretical AND they took responsibility for patient care rather than as it seems to be now , it being done by committees of staff who seem to trip over each other doing the same job. (Nurses of various levels, nursing assistants, physicians assistants, dieticians, phlebotomists, physiotherapists, etc. etc.) I think she would have been an Anti-vaxxer!

Reply

Alan says: 3/20, 2021 at 1:50 am

> they spent more time holding the patient's hand

According to Dr Tom Cowan's book, "Human Heart, Cosmic Heart", the heart is not a pump, and the blood is moved not by the heart's "pumping" action, but rather, by a kind of electrical energy present in the blood and vessels. And close contact with another human or animal – such as the holding of hands – is one way to channel energy in order to fuel the blood flow.

It could be imagined that many diseased persons would have some kind of blood flow problem to some degree. Hence, besides psychological comfort, the nurse's holding a patient's hand has very real physiological benefits.

If they can fool so many people and get them to go along with what they're being told is science, without honoring the whole scientific method in the first place so that one can know the truth then there is certainly something else going on.

Ive saved and bookmarked this article. One day when that something else thing is figured out, then perhaps every man and woman will understand the importance pf and demand that the burden of proof is on whom is making the claim, especially health officials regarding viruses. But until then, it is not science and it is something else.

I can see the orchestrated deception, can be deeply believed by the masses so much so that the deceptionist will continue with it, even though they are totally exposed.

But Jons recent article is showing that it may actually be breaking down. At least for some of these front men and organizations. Yay!

While I agree with almost all of Jon's well stated and scientifically backed opinion, I differ on the point that CV 19 does not exist.

I agree on the total inadequacy of the PCR test and almost all the figures coming from this BS testing being meaningless. That the stats of those labeled as dying from CV 19 are fraudulent in the extreme.

This said, I do believe that a coronavirus was engineered in laboratories cooperating for gain of function and then this virus was released with the narrative in place and ready for rollout for propagandizing the public.

The purpose being to disrupt world society on a grand scale so that change agents could do the work for the 'pyramid cap' to usher in their great [sic] reset and 4IReveloution.

The various vaxxs with their high casualty rates as a further conscious intention to load families and society with these injured, as per vaxx caused autism. We have yet to see what pathology will develop in the inoculated in the near future and beyond as many scientists are predicting.

Now we also have the stage being set for an much more deadly release with a top vaxx specialist warning the current vaxxs may produce a 'superbug' as they mutate past the mRNA vaxx measures, which also limit our natural immune system's ability to respond.

In reality, setting the stage for even more intense medical tyranny, as the 'cap' desires, and further mandated vaxxs as population control protocols are set in place.

Add to this a planned cyber attack on the health and financial structure and we have a powerful one two punch that would leave society in a shambles ready to be 'built back better' for the 'cap.'

Taking a page from Saul Alinsky's modus these psychopaths will use any means to an end at any scale. Humanity should have learned this one over one hundred years ago that these metaphysical mistakes are very capable of evil and should not be anywhere near wealth and power as they are inhuman and act accordingly.

If this psy-op is anything (else) at all, it's a 'new' way to deliver (SOME of) the poisons that have been engineered for mass consumption. Big pharma does reign over the minds of (MOST) men, and even though it's very clear that today's (and tomorrow's, and next week's, and so on) in-tox-ulations are just a new form of 'typhus infected blankets,' they're being presented to 'us' in such a 'devilishly clever' way that the (STUPID) general population will still pretend (and they'll ACTUALLY BELIEVE, too) that it's the GOV's way of 'just keeping them warm.'

That's why we're seeing the mind-shorn sheeple wrapping themselves in those fluffy, friendly lies.

If you take their shot, you've lost.

Good article but one huge mistake. In the swab samples they won't find a (complete) virus as they only can find a tiny fragment of an alleged torn apart virus. In order to find a complete virus (which don't exists) you have to dig deeper into the body.

Reply

Gavin says: March 18, 2021 at 7:57 pm

Yes viruses are a product of our body and if they exist in the lungs then that is the bodies attempt at purging the virus after it has done its job of detoxing us of some poison or other. From what I understand anyway. The following website is very good.

Jon has done his part. The above doctors and scientists have done theirs. Much information has been amassed for further evidence of fraud, with the PCR tests, etc. Search "convicted felons" on RFK Jr's website for plenty of evidence of the criminality of the vaccine corporations, and their stranglehold on the medical system, the CDC, FDA. PCR is the only proof that there is a pandemic and asymptomatic spread. If I take PCR at face value that it found with 100% accuracy that a person had the unique gene from the genome of Sars-Cov-2, that gene still has no capability of infection. Even if you say that the amplified particle found is proof that Sars-Cov-2 is in the body, if all you find are pieces then that means the rest of the missing genome is incomplete and not able to infect.

But I think there is another basic “benchmark” missing here.

Given [according to science papers] “viruses have no metabolism, don’t grow and only mutate”, what is a “virus”? Should science apply Antoine Bechamp’s terrain theory to clarify origin “definition”?

According to Bechamp, of course, the body “reacts” to “external invading particles”, which include various chain reaction mutations?

That without metabolism doesn’t live, so are we to suppose all viruses are caused by [not living] pollution that is “animated” by a body’s internal remedial processes?

Incidentally, have you heard about “Mad Cow Disease” (the technical name begins with a “P”, I forget it) “added” to Covid vaccine serums??

The virus exists. I caught it, as did the others in the house. And it was unlike the flu. My dad almost died from it.

You probably “caught” some bad food. Food is grown with poison today and the CDC forgets to test for this with “food borne illness”.

“At one time, every high school student was taught the scientific method.”

Not in my lifetime, and I’m almost as old as Jon

I follow Hammond and Nass on this one, as their reasoning and their evidence are better grounded than Rappoport’s.

But it feels good to know that there are people with a different belief. I’m at a point where I believe that dissent is one of the pillars of civilization. In my own opinion, this virus is too weak compared to what people have been ordered to believe. T is the perfect political weapon for these times. And there is no reason why the CCP and the USFG would not collaborate in a world wide conquest project. You shall find Truth in Theater.

“their reasoning and their evidence”

There is no evidence for SARS-COV-2. See Kaufman, Cowan, Lanka, Scoglio... It's time to move on.
