

Part 2, What is the political future of anti-vaxers?

JON RAPPOPORT
SEP 06, 2024 · PAID

132 Likes · 41 Comments · 8 Restacks

(For Part-1, click here.) (This is Part-13 in a series; for Part-14, click here; for Part-12, click here.)

Republican Party. Democrat Party. Anti-Vaxer Party?

Why not?

Slogan: WE'RE FED UP.

There are millions of people who are opposed to vaccination. Why do they have to wait until AFTER elections to speak out?

"Shh. Don't say anything now, or our stealth candidate won't win. But after he does win, then we'll go public."

Crazy.

Actual politics as opposed to fake politics means taking a principled position and standing up for it. Right now.

You don't form the Always Later Party.

You don't form the We Can't Win If We Speak the Truth Party.

You show your numbers and your strength leading up to an election, not afterwards.

Here's part of the problem. When you set your goal as "freedom of choice," "the freedom to take vaccines or not take them," and that's your bottom line and your highest aspiration, there is no need to expose mass poisoning of the population.

People can just say, "We're for free choice." No power, no energy, and once again, you're pulling your punches, you're keeping quiet. You're being timid.

"Shh. Don't say the injections are devastating lives. Just campaign on freedom."

Ridiculous.

Another problem. People are being told by supposed "anti-vaccine leaders," "We're not really against vaccines, we just want to make them safer."

That's hogwash. Millions of people who've experienced the damage want the real message: THEY'LL NEVER BE SAFER.

History is replete with political Parties that appeared out of nowhere with strong uncompromising stands. It works. It's real. That's the lesson.

Go all in. Put your opponents up against the wall.

Get the conflicts out in the open. A candidate running for office is hit with media who say, HE'S AN ANTI-VAXER. He replies, YOU'RE DAMN RIGHT I AM. ANYONE WITH A HALF A BRAIN IS. And the new political Party is off and running. It's not peeking out of a closet. ATTACK, DON'T DEFEND.

Go after the media. Expose them as a bunch of liars and paid shells and operatives for Pharma.

That's one thing Trump did well the first time he ran for President. He slammed the fake news media every day. And people responded, because they, too, knew the media were fakes.

MEDIA: John Jones, the Anti-Vaxer nominee for President, is one of the most radical candidates ever to run for public office in this country. He's not just for freedom of choice or no mandates or safer vaccines, he's saying no one should ever take the injections and they should be outlawed."

JOHN JONES: Thanks for spelling out my position. Perfect. Now let's get down to brass tacks. Here's the truth about vaccines...

The doctors and the medical groups will go after John Jones hammer and tongs. Good. Get all that out in the open, too. Jones comes back with miles of evidence proving vaccines have always been a disaster. He doesn't talk like a dome head intellectual scientist, he uses every piece of evidence as a weapon of war. Because we're in a war.

Jones is a fiery speaker. He has that aura. He can mobilize people. He gives a voice to their voices.

Every time an anti-vax candidate runs for office, he educates people. But he comes on like an express train. Like a storm. With no let-up. He's not doing a college course or public relations, he's doing truth.

"But oh, our anti-vax candidates have to be doctors. They carry a lot of weight."

Bullshit. Quite often, doctors put people to sleep. If a doctor can come on like Teddy Roosevelt, fine. But we need the Teddy part, not the doctor.

"Oh, but a fiery combative candidate will alienate some of our own anti-vax people."

True. At first. But as time goes on and the candidate keeps shooting out real evidence exposing vaccines...the tide will turn. Those alienated people will come back, when they realize we're still standing and we're making inroads. We haven't been crushed. Far from it.

I recently ran a whole week of articles exposing vaccines. Part of the reason was, I wanted readers to get the impact of one piece of evidence after another, with no let-up. On and on.

The truth is on our side, and the truth is abundant.

We just have to offload the doubts and useless misgivings about a REAL campaign for political office.

Yes, we'd be in for a huge fight. But when the initial dust clears and we're still there and we're still hammering away, we gain confidence.

We can go up against dyed in the wool liars and criminals.

When 100,000, 200,000, 300,000 people say I'M ANTI VAX, all sorts of things change.

The tyrants aren't so quick to try to brush us aside.

If, from the moment he declared his candidacy for President, Kennedy had gone all in on attacking vaccines and done NOTHING ELSE...by this time how many people do you think would have come to his side, to his aid? How powerful would his message be?

EXACTLY.

-- Jon Rappoport

Post content with 132 Likes, 41 Comments, 8 Restacks, and navigation buttons (Previous, Next).

Discussion about this post

- Comments section with user avatars, names, dates, and text of comments and replies.

39 more comments...

- Feed of related posts with titles, dates, and authors.