"Interestingly, some other countries such as Canada and Mexico do not outline mandates and have generally higher immunization rates than in the United States. However, in Canada there is no exemption to vaccinate, including beliefs/conscience/religion. Vaccination is considered a matter of personal choice or hospital procedure for non-vaccination (yet). They do require a vaccination certificate on entry into childcare or school. This is to identify non-vaccinated children during a disease outbreak.

The following is an edited copy of a page saved from the AMA web site in March 2002.

H-440.970 Religious Exemptions from Immunizations

Since religious/philosophic exemptions from immunizations endanger not only the health of the unvaccinated individual, but also the health of the community, the AMA will actively oppose: (1) any new religious/philosophic exemptions; (2) legislative attempts to broaden existing religious/philosophic exemptions to vaccination requirements; and (3) encourages physicians and state and local medical associations to work with public health officials to inform religious groups and others opposed to vaccinations of the benefits of vaccinations and the risks to their own health and the health of the general public if they refuse to accept them; and

(3) encourages state and local medical associations to work with public health officials to develop contingency plans for controlling outbreaks of vaccine-preventable diseases in the event that they occur in populations with low vaccination rates or communities where groups having religious exemptions to vaccination reside. (CSA Rep. B, A-97; Reaffirmed: Sunset Report, I-07)

AMA's current article on this issue:
Why medical reasons should be the only exemptions from vaccinations
(http://1995.shotsbytes.com/columns/s0801.stasher/shotsBarrier/AMAExemptions.jsp

Religious exemptions: Religious exemptions are based on the misguided notion that religious freedom protects. They promote the issue that it is a child's right to be "immunized" but parents have the right to refuse. This is not the issue. The issue is not vaccination, nutrition and hygiene are the great contributors. http://www.childrenwm.org/

Source: http://www.fairmeasures.com/stateviewr/questions/sick31.htm from archive of 12-12-02 webpage:

Can employees be forced to be vaccinated? H-440

I am being asked to produce documentation that my employees have received vaccinations, and rumbles for a medical/nursing school job. My employees are not in direct contact with patients. Can I require them to be vaccinated? Can I require them to be vaccinated if they are in an individual role getting an MMR vaccination for the sole purpose of employment? Can I require them to be vaccinated?

Ann Kiernan replies:

If you were not a health care worker, you almost certainly be NO! But since the nature of nursing involves occupational exposure to blood and other potentially infectious materials, the employer might be able to require that employees be vaccinated against certain diseases.

Under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), an applicant is given a conditional job offer, but before s/he starts work, an employer may require a medical examination (and may condition employment on the results) as long as all entering employees in the same job category. But, after employment begins, an employer may make disability-related inquiries and require medical examinations only when they are job-related and consistent with business necessity. Generally, this standard is met when the employer has a reasonable belief, based on objective evidence, that an employee's ability to perform essential job functions will be impaired by a medical condition or will pose a direct threat due to a medical condition. 42 U.S.C. 12112 (d)(4)(A); 29 C.F.R. 1630.14(c) Enforcement Guidance on Disability-Related Inquiries and Medical Examinations of Employees Under the ADA, 8 FEP Manual (BNA) 405:7191, 7194 (7/27/00).

All states allow a medical exemption and some states allow philosophical and/or religious exemptions. However, the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) may require employers to accommodate employees who refuse vaccinations.

Likewise, other examples here are also challenging informed consents.

> "I understand that due to my occupational exposure to blood or other potentially infectious materials I may be at risk of acquiring hepatitis B virus (HBV) infection. I have been given the opportunity to be vaccinated with hepatitis B vaccine, at no charge to myself. However, I decline hepatitis B vaccination at this time. I understand that by declining this vaccine, I continue to be at risk of acquiring hepatitis B, a serious disease. If in the future I continue to have occupational exposure to blood or other potentially infectious materials and I want to be vaccinated with hepatitis B vaccine, I can receive the vaccination series at no charge to me."

"Interestingly, some other countries such as Canada and Mexico do not outline mandates and have generally higher immunization rates than in the United States. However, in Canada there is no exemption to vaccinate, including beliefs/conscience/religion. In Mexico, there is no exemption to vaccinate, including medical reasons, but there is a high vaccination rate."

Mexico has a very aggressive "immunization" program. If you are going to live in Mexico and need your children in school, please enquire locally for the information about how to exempt your children from vaccinations. Also, see the Travel section of this page.

Mexico has a "National Vaccination Card" (which is actually a 3 page booklet), where their vaccination history has to be registered.
A complete vaccination record, shown and validated in the National Vaccination Card is mandatory for being enrolled in public schools, as well as the majority of private ones.

Vaccination Info
Vaccination is considered a matter of personal choice or hospital procedure for non-vaccination (yet). They do require a vaccination certificate on entry into childcare or school. This is to identify non-vaccinated children during a disease outbreak.

The following is an edited copy of a page saved from the AMA web site in March 2002.

H-440.970 Religious Exemptions from Immunizations

Since religious/philosophic exemptions from immunizations endanger not only the health of the unvaccinated individual, but also the health of the community, the AMA will actively oppose: (1) any new religious/philosophic exemptions; (2) legislative attempts to broaden existing religious/philosophic exemptions to vaccination requirements; and (3) encourages physicians and state and local medical associations to work with public health officials to inform religious groups and others opposed to vaccinations of the benefits of vaccinations and the risks to their own health and the health of the general public if they refuse to accept them; and

(3) encourages state and local medical associations to work with public health officials to develop contingency plans for controlling outbreaks of vaccine-preventable diseases in the event that they occur in populations with low vaccination rates or communities where groups having religious exemptions to vaccination reside. (CSA Rep. B, A-97; Reaffirmed: Sunset Report, I-07)

Religious exemptions: Religious exemptions are based on the misguided notion that religious freedom protects. They promote the issue that it is a child's right to be "immunized" but parents have the right to refuse. This is not the issue. The issue is not vaccination, nutrition and hygiene are the great contributors. http://www.childrenwm.org/

Can employees be forced to be vaccinated? H-440

I am being asked to produce documentation that my employees have received vaccinations, and rumbles for a medical/nursing school job. My employees are not in direct contact with patients. Can I require them to be vaccinated? Can I require them to be vaccinated if they are in an individual role getting an MMR vaccination for the sole purpose of employment? Can I require them to be vaccinated?

Ann Kiernan replies:

If you were not a health care worker, you almost certainly be NO! But since the nature of nursing involves occupational exposure to blood and other potentially infectious materials, the employer might be able to require that employees be vaccinated against certain diseases.

Under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), an applicant is given a conditional job offer, but before s/he starts work, an employer may require a medical examination (and may condition employment on the results) as long as all entering employees in the same job category. But, after employment begins, an employer may make disability-related inquiries and require medical examinations only when they are job-related and consistent with business necessity. Generally, this standard is met when the employer has a reasonable belief, based on objective evidence, that an employee's ability to perform essential job functions will be impaired by a medical condition or will pose a direct threat due to a medical condition. 42 U.S.C. 12112 (d)(4)(A); 29 C.F.R. 1630.14(c) Enforcement Guidance on Disability-Related Inquiries and Medical Examinations of Employees Under the ADA, 8 FEP Manual (BNA) 405:7191, 7194 (7/27/00).

All states allow a medical exemption and some states allow philosophical and/or religious exemptions. However, the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) may require employers to accommodate employees who refuse vaccinations.

Likewise, other examples here are also challenging informed consents.

Disability-Related Inquiries and Medical Examinations of Employees Under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

So, is immunity to measles, mumps and rubella either "job-related and consistent with business necessity" or required by other law? Maybe, according to our research at the Centers for Disease Control.

The CDC report strongly recommends that health care workers be immunized for hepatitis B, influenza, measles, mumps, rubella, varicella zoter, and tetanus.

Another federal agency, OSHA, says in its Technical Manual governing hospitals [Chapter 1. IV B 2. b] that: "Vaccination for rubella, measles, mumps, and influenza is recommended, especially for women of child-bearing age."

[Note: [Chapter 1. III B 3.] also says, " A safety committee and/or infection control committee should be established within the hospital. Periodic inspection and monitoring is the responsibility of the safety committee. Immunizations, other than the mandatory vaccination for Hepatitis B, should be offered to personnel at risk."

It is not directly relevant to your situation, but a recent federal appeals decision upheld a Navy captain's right to insist that both military and civilian personnel on his ship be vaccinated for anthrax when they were entering " high threat areas and contiguous waters". Mazares v. Dep't of the Navy, 302 F.3d 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2002)

Thanks for raising such an interesting issue. We have only scratched the surface here. This would be a good question to pose to your state nursing society or professional board for a definitive answer.
