Visualizing All Attempted & Successful Moon Landings

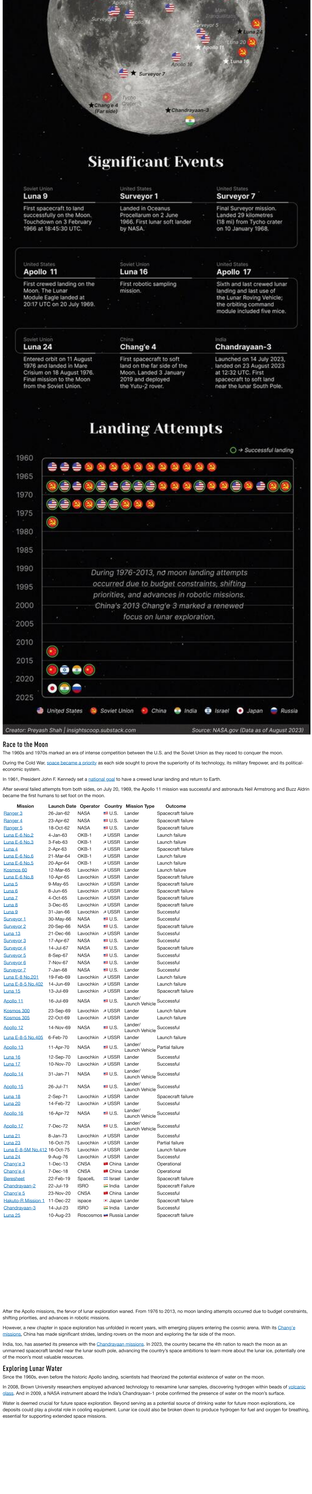
BY TYLER DURDEN

SATURDAY, OCT 14, 2023 - 04:45 PM

Since before Ancient Greece and the first Chinese Dynasties, people have sought to understand and learn more about the moon.

Curiosity and centuries of study culminated in the first moon landing in the 1960s. But there have been many other attempted moon landings, both before and after.

This chart by Visual Capitalists' Prayash Shah illustrates all the moon landings using NASA data since 1966 when Soviet lander Luna 9 touched down.



Race to the Moon

The 1960s and 1970s marked an era of intense competition between the U.S. and the Soviet Union as they raced to conquer the moon.

During the Cold War, space became a priority as each side sought to prove the superiority of its technology, its military firepower, and its political-economic system.

In 1961, President John F. Kennedy set a national goal to have a crewed lunar landing and return to Earth.

After several failed attempts from both sides, on July 20, 1969, the Apollo 11 mission was successful and astronauts Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin became the first humans to set foot on the moon.

After the Apollo missions, the fervor of lunar exploration waned. From 1976 to 2013, no moon landing attempts occurred due to budget constraints, shifting priorities, and advances in robotic missions.

However, a new chapter in space exploration has unfolded in recent years, with emerging players entering the cosmic arena. With its Chang'e missions, China has executed significant robotic landing rovers on the moon and exploring the far side of the moon.

India, too, has asserted its presence with the Chandrayaan missions. In 2023, the country became the 4th nation to reach the moon as an unmanned spacecraft landed near the lunar south pole, advancing the country's space ambitions to learn more about the lunar ice, potentially one of the moon's most valuable resources.

Exploring Lunar Water

Since the 1960s, even before the historic Apollo landing, scientists had theorized the potential existence of water on the moon.

In 2008, Brown University researchers employed advanced technology to reexamine lunar samples, discovering hydrogen within beads of volcanic glass. And in 2009, a NASA instrument aboard the India's Chandrayaan-1 probe confirmed the presence of water on the moon's surface.

Water is deemed crucial for future space exploration. Beyond serving as a potential source of drinking water for future moon explorations, ice deposits could play a pivotal role in cooling equipment. Lunar ice could also be broken down to produce hydrogen for fuel and oxygen for breathing, essential for supporting extended space missions.

With a reinvigorated interest in exploring the moon, manned moon landings are on the horizon once again. In April 2023, NASA conducted tests for the Artemis II mission, the first manned spacecraft to aim for the moon since 1972. The agency aims to send astronauts to the moon around 2025 and build a base camp on the lunar surface.

I don't think the moon is even a solid object....which is why to this date we still don't even have a camera streaming photos/videos of Earth. I think this guy was right: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1cCNGcbwXWg

The most likely explanation for the Moon, is observational error.

But can we "do it again?". We were told that we HAD the technology to do it but that it somehow got lost. Happens all the time.

Specifically, getting men and technology through the Van Allen radiation Belt poses an enormous challenge. Let's see....

chandrayaan 2 photographed the apollo 11 landing site from lunar orbit.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Third-party_evidence_for_Apollo_Moon_landings neil armstrong landed on the moon first.

you seem dumb when you express skepticism. wake up, read up on chanjoaxma's successful moon reconnaissance and recoding of the surface of the moon including the apollo 11 landing site which IS STILL THERE MUFUGGA.

you are dumb if you keep expressing skepticism, since the proof of real'no real is BACK since the landing site was photographed by the Indian Space program. and it was THERE. apollo 11 was real, so shut yo' mouf.

At a higher elevation pilots receive a larger dose from cosmic radiation because there is less atmospheric shielding.

1 Sievert is linked to about a 5% excess risk of fatal cancer.

At 30,000 feet, airline pilots receive about 10 microSievert per hour.

How do ISS astronauts survive for 6 months at 200,000 feet, where radiation is 365 times higher?

Space suits are not safe from cosmic radiation.

Space is fake.

On the VERY long (14hrs+) non-stop flights over the North Pull to Los Angeles and New York from Singapore typically at 38-40K Ft after some fuel is burned off, pilots were restricted as to how many of these flights they could make for this very reason.

Our Sun shines with a luminosity of 1L. By the time its light reaches Earth it is already perceived as a much smaller, brighter and hotter disc than it truly is. By the time its light reaches Pluto, 6 billion km from the Sun, it already looks like any other star in Earth's night sky.

Our nearest star, Alpha Centuri (A) shines with a luminosity of 1.5L, and is 41.5 billion km away from us.

Question: How can we see the light of a star, which is one and a half times brighter than our Sun, travel nearly 7000 times further (41.5 trillion divided by 6 billion) and still be perceived to be as bright and large in the Earth's night sky as our Sun would appear when viewed from Pluto?

Witchbroiler 5 days ago

@Model-M, your calculations are off. From Pluto the sun is brighter than even the full moon is for us. https://www.quora.com/What-is-the-magnitude-of-the-Sun-from-Pluto-orbit?share=1 no way, moon is a reflection of earth. we live in a crater. the spaceships only make it up high enough to see out of the crater. ask elon musk. the shuttles make it out to the larger earth colonisers and we have been taken over by a puzzle type entity from a different realm which piggybacks onto our minds like the parasite it is. – this is way better than statista top ten david letterman type boring articles and shouldn't be banned on youtube.

There are recent video's that appear to show a type of water firmament above which stops craft going higher. Evidence shows use of two or more separate thrusters, one quickly after the other to try to pierce the surface, which appears to cause a ripple effect.

Check out the "concave" earth theory ... it's quite challenging but appears to explain phenomena better than both flat and spherical earth theories ...

https://humbleconcave.com/earths-concave-earth-documentary-lord-steven-christ.html

... and would also answer my question (above) as to why the stars are all (more or less) the same size/brightness even though they are "billions" of miles ("light years") away ...

India has in fact made a lander on the moon.

After receiving a message from ground control saying "please do the needful" it dropped a turd with an Indian flag.

The lander responded with "thank you please" and a head bobble then got rapey with the nearest crater.

Before discussing Stanley Kubrick's film production of the U.S. landing on the moon, we need to address people promoting Earth is a spinning ball.

When pilots are trained by the FAA or NASA engineers calculate space flight, they assume a non-rotating, flat Earth surface.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) assumes a flat earth even when training pilots and air traffic controllers using their Target Generation Facility (TGF).

The software used in the TGF must be accurate in order to properly train pilots and air traffic controllers on the behavior of aircraft in flight.

https://freedmountainpublishing.com/2022/05/11/official-government-documents-verify-that-the-earth-is-flat/

Trust their science, but don't verify the science.

A spokesman from NASA has made a video a few years back showing off a mock up of the proposed manned vehicle that will go to the moon and Mars. The only problem we have and holding us back is that we currently have no technology that would protect the astronauts from not only the Van Allen radiation belt but even beyond it if they successful got thru the guy explained. NASA has done one experiment with the shuttle having it fly much higher than usual to measure the effects of radiation as they lose the protection of the earth's magnetic field and they only lose that for a short time. It turned out badly as the men saw streaks inside of their eyes as the radiation went right thru the craft and them. They never repeated that experiment.

When NASA was pressed why they do not use the same technology that was used to send a "manned" flight to the moon back in the 60s and 70s, their reply was all that documentation was "accidentally" thrown out when they needed more room in one of their warehouses. They want us to believe that technology that was supposedly developed solving the enormous problem of going thru the Van Allen radiation belts and continuing onward thru space was simply thrown away. That folks is what the government really thinks of the public, we are gullible. They are also really saying that with all the technology we supposedly have today no one is smart enough or has the intelligence to "recreate" that same technology as back decades ago. NASA like the Pentagon are money laundering operations for the MIC and the billions spent on working up to going to the moon and failing needed to have a Hollywood production showing the public, this is where all that money has really gone. The reality is, it flowed into the MIC then shareholders thru dividends as Congress, wall street and western oligarchs got richer which is why Pelosi and the rest will not ban insider trading. Even the pictures and vids of the supposed landings all in different locations on the moon does in fact show the same background locations. The people in Australia knew it was all fake as the feed from the moon on their TVs was not the same feed sent to the rest of the world and everyone saw the coke can when they landed. Product placement? Coke is out of this world! Of course there are other vids of lights falling from overhead, a waving flag with no wind, a van on one shot way in the background, one astronaut not being to get up with the weight on the suit and was jerked up by the wires attached. One researching did an analysis of the size of the hatch and the total diameter of the actual suits with men inside and concluded scientifically that the hatch was too small as was the space they claimed inside the lander. There is simply not enough room in the lander itself for two men fully dressed in space suits and backpacks to fit inside the lander much less go thru the hatch. Another problem is when the first lander was sent from the MIC firm that had the contract, NASA hooked it up and turned it upside down and all this debris from bolts to small metal particles fell to the floor. NASA sent it back explaining that in space the astronauts would end up breathing in these small particles eventually causing respiratory problems then death. Now looking at the blueprints of the lander, one thing is missing: the actual room for the astronauts and vids of the men outside and walking around their is supposedly "moon dust" on their boots, legs, hands where they pick up rocks, do experiments, etc. That dust is carried into the lander and when taking off and in space they would breath in this crap then die. The lander has no vacuum sweeper anywhere in the blueprints. Nor can you find anywhere where those large suits were stored inside the lander when not in use. The firm who had the contract knew it was never going to the moon hence why bother doing a cleaning job. This shows some NASA people believed in this farce that they were really going to the moon. Even if you look closely as many vids have been done pointing this out, the cardboard used for part of the lander model shows areas where the fasteners are missing and part of the cardboard is actually sticking out where the exterior is then not laying flat and smooth removing the appearance of the craft being welded together. In other areas there are actually moving and flapping as they must have had a large fan inside the building where it was filmed cooling the wires firming as the lights used in filming are very hot.

That technology used back then exist in a world where weapons of mass destruction exist, Syria gassed its own people, Iraqi soldiers bayoneted infants in incubators like Hamas, Russia invaded to re-create the USSR and Biden really won the election fair and square.

With so many failures and disasters I find it unbelievable that a mere couple of weeks after the latest "simulated" moon landing we had so many successes and then suddenly everything stopped. Saying that this change of behavior was bizarre would be an understatement. But, one need only look at the crew of the first "landing", at their news briefing upon their appointment to see with ones own eyes just how sheepish and downcast they were. They looked like they were attending a funeral.

I remember the Gemini and Apollo missions. It was all about getting to the moon before the Soviets. Americans were afraid Russia would win.

The Soviets were the first to launch a satellite - on Oct 4, 1957 when Americans sat down to watch the premier episode of Leave it to Beaver. They were the first to put a man in orbit and the first to 'walk' in space. Some Americans believed that, if the Russians got there first, they would launch guided missiles at US from the moon.

Then things became routine for a while. Just more days in space and more orbits. I missed the incrementation of 3 astronauts in '67.

It was Apollo 8 that woke me up. Orbiting the moon around Christmas and reading some religious message to the world. Apollo 9 & 10 to test the lunar module's ability to leave the spacecraft and re-dock.

Finally, Apollo 11 when I was in London (Wembley). I had stay up all night long to see Neil Armstrong step off the ladder at 4am in the morning. I was still awake 2 hours later when my English granddad came down the stairs whereupon my grandmother told him, "They're on the moon". Alas, he was unimpressed - said they could "bloody well stay there".

After Apollo 11, it became boring again. Been there, done that. Fewer and fewer people paid attention. More and more questioned it - especially with Vietnam and a recession and inflation.

Because the Moon is not a natural satellite of Earth. It came from another star system in our galaxy or from another galaxy entirely. It's what's left of something very ancient.

Both the Americans and the Russians knew this by 1972 or earlier.

And I upvoted you because I think you are sincere in you question.

This is because all the images are censored. The most requested space image according to the NSSDC was taken during Apollo 17 on December 13, 1972 of a feature called Tracy's Rock which according to NASA is a giant split boulder that has rolled down the North Massif. What it really is is the remains of a 45 foot Lunar Walker that has been heavily airbrushed to look like an odd boulder. That's essentially how they screwed everybody over.

Orly - there is no reply button so I'll respond here to your comment - "Pretty much looks like a rock."

That's the whole idea. The image has been altered. There are dozens of photos taken of this object and they do not agree. NASA's account of it is baloney. I will have a link laying this whole thing out in the near future. I've been posting here for 12 years just stay tuned it's an amazing story.

I have been fascinated by space travel since I was a little kid and would like to know as much as I can.

I just don't go in for all the "flag-waving wind on the moon" idiocy that most people spew as 'proof' the landings were fake because that is clearly not what happened and there are reasonable and far more probable explanations for these 'discrepancies' than Stanley Kubrick in a studio somewhere.

I also would like to know more about the moon itself, as I have an idea for a novel, but it just seems to me that there is very little there besides practice for a run at Mars.

I will look for it, ben. Thanks.

NASA needs to be defunded since it's never left low earth orbit.

Listen to Obama and NASA the clown show here:

If NASA could have left Earth's atmosphere there would have been then and today millions of people traveling to other planets and billions of space flights and 1000s of daily space flights leaving Earth even today. Trillions of dollars were squandered to be used for wars rather than space.

I could list 1,000 reasons why space travel will "NEVER" happen or be possible.

1. The Sun travels through space at 500,000 mph. The Earth and all the other planets follow the sun at 500,000 mph.
2. The earth travels around the sun at 66,600 mph and rotates at 1,021 mph

* G force would kill man

For other latitudes, the speed rotation is:

• 10 degrees: 1,021.7837 mph (1,644.4 km/h)
• 20 degrees: 974.5417 mph (1,568.1 km/h)
• 30 degrees: 808.5414 mph (1,446.1 km/h)
• 40 degrees: 794.80665 mph (1,279.1 km/h)
• 50 degrees: 666.92197 mph (1,073.3 km/h)
• 60 degrees: 518.7732 mph (834.9 km/h)
• 70 degrees: 354.86717 mph (571.1 km/h)
• 80 degrees: 180.18804 mph (289.95 km/h)

3. Space is a vacuum there is "NO" atmosphere or any physical element to push off or fuels to burn for a spacecraft to travel.
4. Temperatures in space are too HOT & COLD for a man or the material to be used in space.
Below - 86°F = -1,000 (454°C)
Above + 3,000 degrees Celsius (5,432 degrees Fahrenheit)

5. No, Elon Musk didn't launch a rocket into space or a car. His recent attempt also failed
6. Earth's gravity is too powerful to leave Earth's atmosphere above 350 miles which is why Elon Musk's recent heavy rocket launch failed
7. Van Allen Belts 4,000 degrees
8. Ceramics tiles melt at 3,200 degrees
9. Titanium and aluminum capsules melt at 1,800 degrees

10. 2023: Lead Acid Batteries Fail above (100-104) degrees (Minus-35-75) below zero "Fail"
11. I knew that NASA was going to kill that teacher and crew because space flights are "NOT" possible.

Earth is screaming through space at 1.3 million mph. Earth orbits the sun at 66,000 mph, and the sun orbits the Milky Way at 514,000 mph, our solar system's speed relative to the CMB is about 827,000 mph. Our government is continuously engaged in false flags and other conspiracies, but they aren't very good at them. If you're a thinking person, you see through them immediately, because they aren't designed to convince you, they only need to convince enough of the lowest common-denominators out there.

However, on the moon landings, I'm going to disagree with the skeptics. There's more evidence to support it was real, than they would ever put into an actual conspiracy to deceive. And it would have to be international, in scope, with the Russians and the Chinese playing along. It was, in fact, the zenith of mankind's ascent, and we've been descending into a new dark ages, ever since.

One book review:

I've read many books about UFOs and the like, and have considerable sympathy for the subject. This, however, is a rather embarrassing example of the lunatic fringe - in which it is revealed how NASA is just part of some giant unclear conspiracy to cover up all kinds of stuff to do with Mars, the Moon, alien civilisations, Egyptology, fourth-dimensional physics, oh and also a bunch of other conspiracies and sinister organisations.

The main author, one Richard Hoagland, writes of himself in the third person throughout, as if giving a gloss of drama and objectivity, yet this is a self-serving document, recounting the history of his brilliant ideas and his lame, biased or malign detractors, peppered with overuse of italics and shudder quotes in case you don't get the message.

But it is the wild extrapolations from extremely flimsy evidence that make this book just embarrassing and annoying to read. For instance, blurry photographs of the Moon or Mars are a kind of Rorschach inkblot test: to his eye, ordinary rocks are 'mechanical debris' from some advanced but now-extinct interplanetary civilization. A rock with two dents in it is a 'face'. A robot's head (and I suspect that a significant proportion of rocks look more like a robot's head than the example we are given). Mountains are 'pyramidic', a blurry rock or dune is a 'sphinx'. Inevitably, the not particularly face-like 'Face on Mars' gets much attention. These objects are rather more irregular than an advanced civilization ought to be able to produce - actually they look just like rocks and mountains - but this of course is explained by 'erosion' (even though no erosion takes place on the moon, not having an atmosphere or surface water).

Add to this a heavy dose of unconvincing geometry: draw enough straight lines on a photograph and you find some of them seem to connect these mysterious objects - or rather, they do if you draw enough lines and make enough use of wiggle room, such as saying a line connects to an object when actually it goes a bit to the side. (Lay lines, anyone?)

Then measure the angles produced, and with a bit more jiggling you can come up with something close to numbers that don't have any mathematical significance, like, say, e/pi, or e/root 5 – but why not more obvious constants like e or 5? Well, we are told, this is obviously an alien 'message' about hyperdimensional physics which tells us that the planets all contain a fourth-dimensional spinning pyramid or something...

Other photographs of the moon landings have even more bizarre interpretations: anything looking like a scratch on the negative is actually a 'tuthmus' supporting one of many giant glass domes over craters; these domes are naturally invisible in the photos (being made of glass), but hey, they're obviously there, aren't they? (Hoagland's inability to get any scientific journals to publish such results are naturally all part of the conspiracy.)

But wait, there are more dots to be connected. It's all something to do with not only the Masons, but also the Nazis (I kid you not). As shown by all kinds of things which turn out to be mysteriously symbolic: e.g. a particular moon launch occurs on the anniversary of Hitler's birthday (a date which after all only arises once every year). Quite why NASA would choose a launch date on such a cryptic yet symbolic basis, rather than - say - to do with the relative position of the earth and moon, is not clear: perhaps to send a secret message? To whom, and why? Some NASA announcement occurs three years to the day after JFK's assassination - all very suspicious and symbolic, so clearly is another secret message telling us we're not-quite-sure-what. After all, the anniversary of JFK's assassination only comes round every year. (Come to think of it, isn't almost every day the anniversary of some more or less important historical event?)

NASA also uses strange symbolism in its official patches for space suits etc - for example, the Apollo program patch has a big letter A on it, secretly denoting (in the mind of Hoagland, not Apollo but Asar, an ancient Egyptian word for Osiris, i.e. the constellation Orion, which has something important to do with Egyptian mythology and hence pyramids and YOU SEE HOW IT ALL MAKES SENSE.

Quite how this book made it to the New York Times bestseller list is a mystery to me, and one rather more disturbing than the contents of this deranged and tedious book.

There is some conjecture stating that we never landed on the moon. To dismiss this idea, someone who has a telescope should point it at the landing sites to generate a website with the video evidence, from earth, of the lunar module, car, tire tracks, flag, debris, ... The moon landing claims are verifiable. They left stuff on the moon. It's either there or it isn't. If they lied, they would eventually be caught out by those those that come later. And, indeed, whenever a probe gets close enough to take pictures they do see the previous sites.

The climate hoax on the other hand has nothing that can be checked. It's all "scientists say" and computer models. Don't believe your senses. Trust me.. it's warmer, the ice is melting and there are less polar bears. AND that is the key human survival on this planet, temperature, ice and polar bears.

Until a fuel-less method of controlling GRAVITY is discovered Humanity will remain very limited and short distanced in Space.

Until we have successfully established a LIVABLE "International-Lunar-Base" [ILB being the next step to ISS] and LIVED on our moon >365 without adverse health affects, any long distance missions shall remain a dream (or suicide mission). We will need lunar capable Shuttle(s) to haul equipment and return for more, if we have any chance at "real" space. Or we will need to harvest the moon and MAKE equipment/fuel as needed.

We have yet to obtain accurate data of the effects of prolonged Solar-Radiation upon a human; an ILB will marginally simulate a planetary mission. We do not know how to deflect micro/macro asteroids/particles from a space-craft/ILB much less have the energy conducted to make an emergency trip home. Leaving Earth needs a serious plan of baby steps to quantify/mitigate risks to astronauts, not sterilizing them for posterity/fame.

Space needs to be a WORLD challenge - not political bragging milestone(s) or that ELIE rock will get Earth, again. I'm not a rocket-scientist but the above are glaringly obvious required tasks.

1 Reply

Fluff The Cat 5 days ago (Edited)
No, I don't think so. It would be impossible for the ISS to withstand the 10^-17 TOR vacuum of space. NASA's own Sandusky chamber is a 10^-6 TOR vacuum which is millions of orders of magnitude less powerful.

Not that I buy into their space fantasy nonsense anyhow, I'm merely demonstrating how fake it all is by using their own "facts" against them.

2 Reply

ABNstorgy PENNON 5 days ago
You compare apples and pears.

The ISS has a very small volume and an oxygen-rich atmosphere, with a pressure that is only a fraction of the air-pressure at sea-level. Moreover this pressure is on the inside of the ISS pressing to the outside.
You could also ask, why an aluminum soda-diving airbottle can withstand the pressure-differential of 200 bar. Because it is enclosing only a small volume.

On the other hand, to fill a large volume such as the NASA chamber with air at 200 bar would also require much more material for encasement.

I already said I don't believe in any of this space nonsense anyhow. We live in a closed system and the world is nothing like what's been presented to us.

Let me put it this way. The U-2 spy plane flies at an altitude of 70,000ft and can see for thousands of miles, both photographically and electromagnetically, yet according to globe curvature math the maximum distance it should only be able to see from that height is 324.4 miles - a rather massive difference.

What point are you even trying to make? Acetylene gets unstable above any pressure above the ambient atmospheric pressure here on earth, so what? The ambient pressure in space is zero, which is of course less than the 15 psi you're warning about.

There was a blip in the broadcast. What Armstrong actually said was, "That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

In Polish, it is, "Gdzie są te wszystkie biale kobiety?"

Pathetic nonsense - NO CNE has ever landed on the Moon. There is more than enough reasons & reports as to why it was impossible & will be for a long time. After all the Director of 2001: A Space Odyssey is dead -and he did all the false filming.

Nothing compares to the billions of years of the earths harvested earth matter in the way of the suns greatest fan.

Oil and fossils.

No way some human will supercede this with a battery and some windmills and solar panels.

To employ humans you need to create war.

I don't put a lot of stock in various websites since anything can be created.

But I do take official Nasa and Gov't sites seriously even though they can do the same but are probably more focused on cover up.

Some times they miss things....

That list identifies just how difficult a moon landing, and return to earth, really is, was, and continues to be.

On the other side of the moon, the dark side, its littered with Hollywood sets and prop companies. Better to keep humans believing, reality is a bitch, once it sets in.

#Truth and the Illusory truth effect -

The illusory truth effect (also known as the illusion of truth effect, validity effect, truth effect, or the reiteration effect) is the tendency to believe false information to be correct after repeated exposure. This phenomenon was first identified in a 1977 study at Villanova University and Temple University. When truth is assessed, people rely on whether the information is in line with their understanding and if it feels familiar. The first condition is logical, as people compare new information with what they already know.

to be true. Repetition makes statements easier to process relative to new, unrepeated statements, leading people to believe that the repeated conclusion is more truthful. The illusory truth effect has also been linked to hindsight bias, in which the recollection of confidence is skewed after the truth has been received.

In a 2015 study, researchers discovered that familiarity can overpower rationality and that repetitively hearing that a certain statement is wrong can paradoxically cause it to feel right. Researchers attributed the illusory truth effect's impact even on participants who knew the correct answer to begin with, but were persuaded to believe otherwise through the repetition of a falsehood, to "processing fluency".

The illusory truth effect plays a significant role in fields such as advertising, news media, and political propaganda.

The Ultra Gun system is the ONLY system that can make heavy large scale material transfer to orbit....

Cost reductions from rocketry is EXPONENTIAL over the cost to orbit today.

Tons per shot can be orbited for later production systems to process further for on orbit materials production....

Any amount of raw material can be lofted.... cheaply.... at tons per shot to start..... a good idea

But a lot of foot dragging going here.

You are about to miss out America.

Trump is a smart man.... We will see.

the moon isn't a consistent density throughout.

the 'side' of the moon that weighs the most is more affected by Earth's pull than the lesser dense side, also, if you pay attention you'll notice that the moon rotates CW/CCW nearly 180 degrees total, negating any permanent north or south pole geography. they lie about nearly everything.

If you've never worked in aerospace or engineering nor understand physics, a big clue that NASA landed on the moon is evident from one of their many mistakes on the lunar module: huge landing pods.
NASA figured the moon was billions of years old and that layers of dust accumulated on the surface.Hence the giant pods on landing gear.
The moon, like earth, is not billions---or even millions---of years old.

No successful Russian landings? I know why: no Ukrainians to help them succeed as was the case during the USSR. May also be related to the Islamification of Russia; the 'die hard patriot' Russian Putin is married to a Muslim Turk Chechen whose people not long ago killed thousands of Russians and terrorised millions more.

No successful Russian landings in '60s or '70s (or '80s) because communism doesn't work.
Now that the communists have conquered Europe and Biden, but lost Russia, Russians will be on the moon before the US gets there again.
