The bird population is down almost 30% in the US since the 1970's. A good hard look at Monsanto Products (Roundup for example) would be a good start. They have been poisoning the food chain for a long, long time.

Insect biomass down 90% worldwide, as well as beneficial microbes in soil, likely due to geoengineering polymer encased heavy metal nanoparticle fallout that is toxifying and desiccating everything. Over the past several months I have had an increasingly hard time concentrating. Could be related to 5G and prion shedding, too. Yes, windmills are bad news for the birds. There is such a thing as synergistic toxicity, where poisons like arsenic, mercury and aluminum are 10-100x more toxic when in the presence of other toxins including EMF. Further research reveals that cicadas are made from peanuts to enhance their crunchiness. These birds are dying from anaphylactic shock, which is now considered highly contagious in the oppressed bird community.

The Biden administration has issued an emergency executive order calling for strict social distancing and masks for all birds in affected areas. Vice President Harris will lead a blue ribbon Democrat committee to determine which Republicans caused this biological catastrophe. Manufacturing of billions of tiny little EpiPens is under way and may be released shortly.

Expanding Chinese viral laboratories for bio-weapons research, are looking for deadly viruses that can jump from a bird to a human. Birds travel farther and faster than monkeys in the forest, and go to populated areas unlike bats. China is also working on vaccines for such viruses, because Fauci told them that doing this gain of function (i.e., make it deadly for humans) research can help them get ahead of any pandemic, so the Chinese can inherit the world.

yes 5G wavelengths are absorbed within a very narrow band near the surface of the skin or eye. The birds can get an eye damaging dose of 5G within a very short time while being near a 5G transmitter. Their brains are pretty near the surface too, so they are also getting their brains destroyed, which accounts for their lack of balance and tremors. Once blind, they starve pretty quickly. See the 115 page NH Commission to Study the Environmental and Health Effects of Evolving 5G Technology at this site: <http://emfsafetynetwork.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/11/NH-State-5G-final-report-2020.pdf> You will not like what you see there, proof that we 'follow the science' only when it does not interfere with profits. 4G kills trees and plants, but 5G wavelengths is killing off the insects, as their body parts are close to resonant frequencies with 5G. We are well into the Sixth Grand Extinction Event (humans are next). And exposure to high field strength 4G frequencies damages red blood cells and produces a set of symptoms identical to the symptoms assigned to COVID (probably just a coincidence).

FCC limits were not developed to protect our flora or fauna. Wireless radiation “safety” limits for trees, plants, birds, insects, pollinators, and wildlife simply do not exist. yes 5G wavelengths are absorbed within a very narrow band near the surface of the skin or eye.

Making blanket statements like that just shows your ignorance and stupidity. 5G is a protocol that can and does operate at many frequencies. In the US, T-Mobile 5G operates at 600MHz which is a much lower frequency than 4G and 3G which makes their 5G much less dangerous than 4G or 3G. These frequencies were taken away from the UHF TV band by the FCC and sold to T-Mobile. Note that television station transmitters operate at much higher power levels than any cell tower.

Certainly mm 5G which operates at the much higher frequency of 24GHz is absorbed by the body and may be dangerous. But before you start babbling about 5G and it's effects, you need to know what frequency the 5G towers in your neighborhood are operating at.

Why not have your head stuffed? You obviously aren't using your brain. Europeans killed cats and got the Black Death. Australians killed 1 million cats and now they have a mouse plague. Ancient Egyptians knew the value of cats which is why they worshipped them.

So what if a few birds die. They just make a racket and shit all over the place anyway. Good riddance.

CONFIRMED for the 91914 area code for San Diego County. A severe drop off in the bird population here. I feed hummingbirds and leave feed out for a range of other type birds on a daily basis.

Estimate a 90% drop off in birds over the past few months!!!

Something is definitely happening to the bird population.

Additional data for theorizing -

A) All types of birds, doves, crows, hummingbirds

B) No flocks or groups of any kind as before

C) No dead birds anywhere as a die off would show

D) Plenty of natural food as before

E) Have seen only 2 hummingbirds lately when normally it would be 20

F) Hummingbirds are very territorial and fight over feeders. Almost none of that now with so few.

G) If it were +/- hummingbird feeders it wouldn't disturb crows or doves, cranes/egrets or hawks.

We are like a virus...wherever we go, we destroy, consume and leave the area completely barren and desolate before moving on to the next area to be decimated by our "progress".

It makes me happy to know that we are destroying our biosphere and along with the experimental gene therapy that low IQ halfwits are trampling each other to get, we will have a mass die out all over the globe.

For the record, I'm not a climate or PETA activist fruitcake. To you low IQ halfwits who will retort that I should die off first, I could care less if I do die in the die off...I'll be dead so it won't matter to me. I'm not afraid of it...everything that lives dies. Most of you are completely terrified of it while I've accepted it.

People think that their lives are so important and they will somehow live long enough to see the change they think they knew was right at the time and tried to implement; that was probably way off and wrong! When I see all this "change" they want it makes me sad and upset for this reason above. They leave the following generation to deal with it. Then the new cadre get arrogant enough to think THEY know better now and the vicious cycle goes round and round. Still, all halfwits, as you say. Even the ones with PHd's from the Ivy League, or maybe, especially them!

How interesting, how sad you have been so thoroughly indoctrinated into the irrational cult of materialism. Materialism as in, "I'm a material girl and I live in a material world." The illogical and unfounded, manipulated belief it's all a random collection of blind chemical reactions on random, dead spinning balls of compounds spinning in meaningless space. The cult of life without meaning, carefully seeded over centuries by a cabal of rulers whose greatest interest has been to separate human beings from their multi-density, spiritual power.

Concretely speaking, just considering how everything we experience is but a sliver on the electromagnetic spectrum. How there are more stars out there than grains of sand on this planet. How we don't know our true history, or true science, or true healing arts, all suppressed for centuries, in favor of the cult of meaninglessness, a favored doctrine of the left btw.

We don't know what we don't know, but you are convinced you know there's no ultimate meaning behind this experience of pain, suffering, and strange synchronicity?

On an empirical level, using a timer, watch your breath for 24 hours. (At 10 minutes a day that happens to take 144 days...). So if your perspective doesn't change. Or don't take this experiential journey, and stay in your curmudgeonly prison.

Of course the pesticides are killing the birds. Go to cities in Pennsylvania and they don't have pigeons anymore. Say something to the people there, who have all turned into mouth-breathers from breathing in all the pesticides, and they just stare at you. It's the same thing in LA. You haven't noticed???

Of course it has absolutely nothing to do with "better living through chemistry". The chemical industry is very lightly regulated, in some instances not at all. The climate change hysteria could be a psyop to distract from the chemical poisoning of the planet. How much does DuPont, Bayer/Monsanto, et al spend supporting the climate change hysteria?

It could be anecdotal, but I've lived here 32 years. Out in the county on 20 acres with lots of fruit trees, and healthy stands of clover. Have always had a thriving honey bee population. From wild hives I presume, since I know of no bee keepers nearby. Thriving so well that one dare not walk across the yard barefoot. 3 years ago it started to decline, rapidly. This year I may have seen a dozen, and they were all flying solo. There are other insects that can assist in pollination, but none compare to honey bees, who are specifically engineered for the purpose.

Now with both fires and drought and low water levels in all the creeks, I would be surprised if it isnt hard on them.

We are getting mountain lion and bear sightings in my neighborhood so the pickins must be slim higher up.

The same thing happened to us when 7 smart meters were installed facing our field. All pollinators gone. Not even hornets were raiding the few watermelons we were able get through hand pollination. We were renting the land, so we returned it. Insects are quite strongly affected by microwave radiation. Arthur Firstenberg believes the bird die-off last September was due to starvation from lack of insects. This time, the effects on the birds may be more direct. Neurological and vision problems are among the effects reported in people as well.

This is my first year having a garden after having lived here four years. I was worried because I didn't see a single bee or really anything alive in our yard. And I had no idea how large borage can get but between that and a black eyed susan, I have hundreds of bees, so many different species. And even squash bees are coming in the morning for zucchini. Plant a lot of borage plants for a fair test.

I live in a very small city that tends to adopt technology as soon as it comes out so once they turn it on here, I'll have a good vantage point to witness its action. If we're all still around...

Birds sign to attract mates and to defend their territory. Birds don't only sing when the sun comes up. They start usually around 3am and sing for a period then stop and continue periodically through the day. You're missing the point of evolution, it doesn't do what is best, it does what works. For instance having the windpipe and esophagus cross is a horrible design, but it doesn't keep people from reproducing. Thus evolution keeps this flaw.

Birds also sing when they are caged up. There's a song about it. Or some endless garbage fakery trying to cram it up.

I used to wake up and tell the birds to shut up... because it was a joke. And they were disturbing my peace. Like everywhere in every bush, cacti, succulent, roof gutter, porch, and it was like hearing all the bees and wasps flap thier wings in a hive. But yeah, I like your drift.

By your logic, TWITTER is suspect. Which is kind of like what you just said. And well, gives me something to think about for a while while I punch myself in the face.

Maybe just a lot of people staying home this past year decided to put out their own bird feeders, so now you're sharing the same population but with 10x the number of feeders out you only see 1/10th.

Just a hypothesis.

Additional data for theorizing -

- A) All types of birds, doves, crows, hummingbirds
- B) No flocks or groups of any kind as before
- C) No dead birds anywhere as a die off would show
- D) Plenty of natural food as before
- E) Have seen only 2 hummingbirds lately when normally it would be 20
- F) Hummingbirds are very territorial and fight over feeders. Almost none of that now with so few.
- G) If it were +/- hummingbird feeders it wouldn't disturb crows or doves, cranes/egrets or hawks.

may be a slight environmental effect or may be something they're ingesting directly or indirectly... there's a lot of weird stuff going on in sciencey world these days... and I'm not sure I really believe that a lot of scientists actually know what the heck they're doing nor do I necessarily trust them...

First, toady said 5G, not you. Second, I used to work with ECM and transmitters... If you knew about phase array antenna transmission beams (5G), you'd be concerned too. Energy doesn't have to be ionizing to be dangerous. Third, there are issues reported globally, but quickly squelched. So who knows... It could BE 5G. And it could be things you suggest. Personally, I don't believe 5G is safe and refuse to go 5G. Problems will emerge slowly.

it could be a 5g thing specifically but it could be in the wider world of radio/light spectrum... as well as its interplay with other elements... whatever is causing it... it doesn't sound good... it sounds a smidge worrisome and I hope they figure it out soon enough...

there are agricultural birds that are kept around for years and in significant numbers and if it's not effecting all birds than may not be a radio/light spectrum situ... depends on what's going on out on the farms per both major industrial and homesteaders... would be interesting to see if its limited to wild populations, migratory, or whether it's spreading/effecting birds of industrial agriculture and birds of small scale homesteaders... depends on which canary in the coal mine we are looking at... which of the birds are the canaries in the coal mine and which of the birds are not the canary in the coal mine...

Obviously something is killing all those birds, and hopefully scientists will have something solid to tell us very soon.

Is it strictly migratory birds or something that can spread from a migratory population to all other birds? It may be something they're picking up while wintering and bringing back within the bird population. It does not have to be something in the local environment as the birds can pick it up elsewhere and carry it with them.

How this author has no clue and doesn't even speculate about 5G is beyond me. I've seen video from Europe where the birds attack the towers trying to tear it apart. They know it's the source that's harming and killing them. 5G disrupts their natural GPS abilities. We're all made of energy among other things. If people don't realize how this will also negatively effect them as well, they are in for a rude awakening.

Magnetic anomalies. Erratic behavior of magnetic field is not something birds and other animals are suited for. A good question that seems to have censored answers is, why is the field losing its integrity? Much interest toward internal dynamics and fluctuations based on cyclical events. Scant public interest in the likelihood of an external influencer, driving internal changes. Interesting.

Are there also anomalies in the conditions and orbital mechanics of other planetary bodies in our system? Is the sun likewise being affected by something not of itself? That would be a good inquiry.

If there were another object influencing our system, would any advanced imaging equipment data go unfiltered before reaching the public? As we have seen in the "tech" world, everything is filtered. Especially space data.

100 dead birds in a parking lot suggests an acute pathogen. Likely not a disease but some type of chemical, electrical, magnetic, etc.... The Common Grackle does not normally flock in such large numbers. Is it more likely they were Starlings? (Were they back with yellows specks?)

Where I live there is a cycle where we get enormous flocks of crows, and then suddenly one day they are all gone except for perhaps one or two dead crows in the street or parking lot. Then over the next several years, the crow population slowly builds back to where it was before and the cycle repeats. I am sure that some government agency is poisoning them, but we never see anything about this in the news. This has been going on for at least 20 years.

As a general rule most any mysterious occurrence that comes to the notice of the public will be blamed on global warming. Except for fires. In CA, these are almost always blamed on PG&E. But in neighboring AZ and NM, large fires are blamed on lightning+global warming.

California/stellar jays have vanished from my neighborhood over the last 3 years or so. About the same time we've gotten tons of crows, and too many parrots. We did have west Nile virus a few years back that was supposed to kill birds, and that may be what got the jays, or it could be the bigger birds moving in.

Just last week I saw the first pair of jays in the neighborhood in a couple of years, not right here but less than a mile away, in a more densely wooded area. Hope that's a good sign. Jays can be noisy but they're also very friendly, love to beg peanuts from humans, they all seem to know how which is weird, since peanuts don't even grow wild here. One of life's little mysteries.

Anyone who had WD Live drive connected to the internet today, regardless of the type of registration, probably lost everything. I remember when West Nile came to our area about 20 years ago. That year there were a fair number of dead birds littering the streets. It was eerie, but gone the next year. So -- I mean it might not be as serious as people think. Around here there are a couple of hoot owls, tons of birds waking us up in the morning, sparrows, cardinals, etc. Also possums and raccoons and a ton of coyotes I think the area is getting quite fed up with.

Soooo...agree whoever these people are are doing some crazy stuff with all kinds of science we don't know about, but it honestly could just be normal. Conspiracy theories aside; any enemy that came to the states would not be interested in killing songbirds, they'd be trying to mess with the food supply. The invasive species, hazardous import, lunatics who want to still eat bushmeat from Africa issue remains roughly out of control though.

I've lived with three cats now as their senior staff member.

All three stopped killing things pretty quick, once they got the idea that it isn't necessary and that I wasn't too keen on the dead things, (although my current one switched to bring me live things for a while until he realised I didn't eat them so there was little point). Like my next door neighbour says, some cats are a plague on her birdtable, ours not so much.

But any cat of mine gets plenty of play and food, so there simply isn't the drive to kill.. The skills are "baked in" but can be diverted to less harmful activity with a bit of direction. Much the same as humans really..

Reminds me of a Chinese RPI college student that died before police could find him. He made a 911 call, but the dispatcher couldn't understand him. After they finally found him dead, the medical examiner said he had fluid in his lungs, symptoms of a bad flu. They tested for flu but it came back negative. Of course they didnt have any tests for Covid back then. So, if you dont know what to test for, you cannot diagnose the illness

Otherwise, seems that the birds around here are ok.

If its something organic..seems to me we would hear about a drop off in numbers of their favorite predator..cats..I had ten outie/inny cats last year..now I have 5..2 died by auto 3 sudden illness, drop off in weight...took less than a week from onset to death..I'm a wreck..the remaining ones showing drop off in eating certain canned foods.and dry..I don't know about anyone else..but do pay attention to your pets..don't let them bring dead squirrels or birds inside..

I've had squirrel problems for several years running....it's like the newest generation or two of squirrels are like ANTI-FA Marxist-Leninist squirrels and they're rioting all over the yard for several seasons... bought a major bigtime squirt gun to blast them with last year... I am prepped for the coming squirrel season this year... those little yard rats and tree rats are going to pay...if they start gettin too rascally and annoying...

Organic, what a twisted joke. I spent over 30 years in agriculture, food and water. There is no such thing as organic in our world. Contamination is prevalent.

Perhaps it's our Chicom and Deep State "friends," (Gates of Hell, Das-Zack, Fraudcheap, et al) testing out a newly-produced virus they're busily preparing for us. This time, they might be slick and are pushing it to birds first, letting them be the breeding ground for this new product to use against us.

I put nothing past them and look forward to the day they hang...after a quick trial.

▲ ▼ Reply ↩

Max21c 1 day ago

In Indiana, authorities tested for avian flu and West Nile virus, but those tests came back negative...

have they been tested for Zika and Covid-19...

have they been tested against GMO's... especially related to insects... both in their local environment and in migratory environments...

likely unlikely its something like covid but covid does effect human central nervous system and brain... and is a lot more potentially dangerous than people have been (misled) led to believe...

there's been a significant dropoff in insect populations and now apparently the bird populations and there may a linkage... not all the dropoff in insect populations over the past several decades is due to light pollution...

is it just US & Canadian or strictly USA bird populations or occurring elsewhere in the Americas...
