In Cyprus, Shock Turns To Anger

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 04/04/2013 22:13 -0400

Greece International Monetary Fund Reuters

For a few days, the rest of the world looked on awaiting the riots and social unrest in Cyprus that we have become accustomed to from their fellow unter-sufferers Greece and Spain; but it never came. However, as Reuters reports, the public shock (and numbness) over the tough terms of the so-called bailout is now turning to anger as million of Euros remain locked inside the country's banks. The people are "disappointed and angry," that the politicians are out of touch, and, "the big guys, who had the information, managed to take their money abroad." No one has answers for them, "I wrote to the central bank and they came back saying that it was not their competence, so whose competence is it?" as frustration boils over, "absolutely nothing adds up." But perhaps the saddest truth is that the Cypriots are resigned to years of hardship, "I am going to find myself on the street with no future, only debts. But we will fight to the end. We have nothing left to lose." It seems when a people has nothing to lose that anything is possible...

Via Reuters,

Public shock in Cyprus about the tough terms of an international bailout is turning into anger as millions of euros remain locked in the country's banks.

They are now demanding answers after allegations earlier this week that a company connected to the family of President Nicos Anastasiades shifted money out of one of the distressed lenders just before the banking system was effectively locked down on March 15.

Anger and impatience is rising as the results of an official inquiry into what caused the crisis, and exactly who knew what and when, is unlikely to be ready for weeks.

Banks reopened last week but Cypriots can withdraw only 300 euros ($390) a day under a range of controls imposed to prevent panicked residents from emptying their accounts or moving all their savings abroad. Anxiety is being deepened by confusion over how the hastily-imposed rules should operate.

Hundreds of bank workers protested outside parliament on Thursday, worried that they could lose much of their pension savings under the terms of the bailout deal. This stipulates that some depositors have to bear part of the rescue's cost if their accounts hold more than 100,000 euros ($128,500).

"I am disappointed and angry," said Iacovos Louca, 53, who works at Popular Bank, which is being wound down under the 10 billion deal with the EU and International Monetary Fund. "The politicians are out of touch with our problems and the big guys, who had the information, managed to take their money abroad."

Lack of clear answers on where their money may end up is fuelling public frustration.

Andrew Georgiou, a 55-year-old British consultant who moved to Cyprus a year ago with the earnings from the sale of his home in London, says all four accounts he holds with Popular – even a sterling account containing just 22 pence – are blocked.

"I wrote to the central bank and they came back saying that it was not their competence, so whose competence is it?," said Georgiou. "Nobody is explaining where anyone should go with a problem."

...

With an extensive remit ranging from the business sense of Cypriot banks hoarding a mass of Greek government bonds while others were selling them and the prudence of government fiscal policies, the judges will need a small army of consultants.

Cypriots are, in the meantime, resigned to years of hardship. Iraklis Paraskeva, 53, has three children to support, now studying in Greece. "I am going to find myself in the street with no future, only debts. But we will fight to the end. We have nothing left to lose."

mate of mine asked 3410842 me what's going on in Cyprus and Europe as a whole....kind of a pointless question without the Big Picture.

Here is my response;

Yeah, the more I read the bigger this whole game is...and it really is a game of winner takes all.

You have many factions woven into several layers within the game. There are the countries around the world, there are the major financial infrastructures, there are the superrich entities, and there are the banking entities which stitch the layers together...which makes sense.

The best way to think of them and how they interact is by way of a Venn Diagram (below), then this will all make much more sense.

Take a simple Venn Diagram with 3 overlapping circles (A + B + C). Note that there are a total of 8 sectors including space outside the circles.

http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/7/7a/Venn_diagram_cmyk.svg

Let's say that;

A = Are the countries of the world

B = Are the major financial infrastructures of the world

C = Are the banking entities of the world

The next layer is where just two of the major players overlap;

A/B = Military Industrial Complex and Major Corporations

B/C = Central Banks

C/A = Major Banks

You can now see how every entity is affected by every other entity, to varying degrees!

There is also another sector, right at the centre. This is the Superrich entities who own most of the real assets on the planet, such as a vast majority of Military Industrial Complex, the Major Corporations and the Major Banks, as well as most of the natural resources. Since the Major Banks own the Central Banks, then the Superrich own the Central Banks as well.

Now here is where it starts to get a little grey.....

Who is at the centre?

Well, there are at least three types of Superrich entities, they are;

1. The ultra-wealthy families who have had money since at least the 1700s'. These families are well known historically but they are very well hidden today, so too is their money (Gold and something else).
2. The Oil wealthy such as the Arab states. These are newcomers to the centre and their future is tied-up with the prosperity of their countries; if the country falls, so do they.
3. The Oligarchical wealthy. More newcomers who have recently emerged from the end of the Cold War. These include most of the families which prospered from the Military Industrial Complex, like the [George] Bushes', and Mafia type Oligarchs like Putin and his KGB mates.

Ok, so that paints a picture of how all the visible entities fit together.....but there's another layer. This is a very, very well hidden layer.

Imagine that the Venn Diagram (the whole world) is drawn on a single piece of paper, well, who owns that piece of paper???

I believe that the next and final layer doesn't really have a name...but I'll call them the Custodians! The Custodians essentially won 80% of the world between the 1300's and 1700's. They comprise of many or most of the Ultra-Wealthy entities dating back as far as the Black Venetian Nobility, the Templars, the Teutonic Templars, the Vatican, and later entities such as the Rothschild family.

On the Venn Diagram these Custodians own most of the paper as well as the entire centre sector of the Venn Diagram.

These Custodians own vast, vast sums of wealth, accumulated over centuries. I believe the sums would be in excess of $700 Trillion. HOWEVER, this figure is not a Dollar figure, or a Yuan figure, or even a Euro figure and this is why...

When Rothschild created the Central Banking System he also created a layering of the system where, the Major Banks in each country owned the Central Banks from whom they borrowed the money. BUT, as with all systems it is built upon a network, and in the case of the Banking System and the entire Global Financial System it is built upon a framework (network) which is 100% owned by these Ultra-Wealthy elite families. It has been this way since the end of the Napoleonic War, where, Napoleon threatened the entire European Banking System as he believed in a Bank of France which lent money at 0% interest...he hated Banks, and Banks hated him!

So the real question is, what is the framework, what is the network???

The Custodial Framework

United Nations – Global Police

World Bank – Global Lender

International Monetary Fund – Global Debt Collector

Intelligence – Custodial Eyes & Ears (Mi6, Mi5, CIA, MSS, Mossad, FSB {KGB}, SIS, CSIS, ASIS, DCRI, BND etc)

Power & Control Centres – US Council on Foreign Relations, European Council on Foreign Relations, Club of Rome, Bilderberg Group, Royal Institute for International Affairs, Trilateral Commission etc.

Main Stream Media – Global Propaganda

Hollywood – Global Propaganda and epicentre for Alternative/Pagan/Kabbalic/Ancient Mystery Religious interests.

The Custodial Network

Bank for International Settlements – Global Banking

Computer Network for the movement and transfer of Global Currencies (the Back Bone)

London Bullion Market Association – Physical distribution and controlling agency of Gold (real wealth)

Central banking Network – Physical distribution and controlling agency of Global Currencies (medium of exchange for services, goods and labour)
Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries – Global distributor and controlling agency of Global Oil (consumable real wealth)

What you must understand is that Currencies are merely a medium of exchange but Gold is real wealth and Oil is consumable real wealth. Oil is a type of hybrid between Currencies and Gold, this is why Oil States sell Oil in Currency (US Dollars) but there is always a payment in physical Gold as well. Oil has a usable function, Gold has a storable function, currency is merely a rate of exchange. You can think of Currency in terms of energy, Currency isn't the fuel, Currency is merely the calorific value of the fuel being burned.

By the very nature of both the framework and the network, we can have a complete and total collapse of the Global Financial System and the Custodians don't lose a single penny as they can simple create a brand new system at the click of a finger...new Currencies, new Bonds, new Banks, new Political systems....new everything....a brand new farm! This is because they own the machinery to make farms as well as the technology to do so.

People talk about a coming New World Order. If you believe what I have written you will see that it's not coming at all, it's already here, and has been here for perhaps 300 years. What they are talking about is merely the next cycle within the existing NWO...nothing more!

If you believe this, then for you the truth is revealed; that the threat of a coming NWO is a False Flag event. It is a deliberate misdirection to distract you from the truth hidden in plain view. If you believe that a NWO may be coming, then by definition, you believe that a NWO cannot currently exist. This is precisely what they want you to believe. They do not want you to realize that the NWO has already been implemented incrementally over the past 300 years and especially since the propagation of the Global Central Banking Cartel whose greatest achievements were the Bank of England, the United States Federal Reserve System, and the Eurozone (including European Central Bank).

There is of course one thing which they cannot create at the click of a finger...Gold!

When financial systems collapse the wealth transfer goes into Gold, which then becomes the store of wealth until a new system is put in place, then, the wealth transfer goes back into the new financial system. So, owning Gold is owning a piece of the next financial system, not the current financial system...get it? This is when Gold is most potent.

<http://politicalmetals.files.wordpress.com/2011/09/global-reserve-currencies1.png?w=595>

For this reason, every time the financial system becomes fragile, every entity always runs to Gold. Often they don't really understand as to why, but they do nonetheless.

The real reason as to importance of Gold is very, very simple. Gold doesn't sit within the Global Financial System itself, it sits outside the system (outside the Venn Circles), resting on the blank white paper which is mostly owned by the Ultra-Wealthy. In visible terms it is like the 'Construct' in the movie the Matrix, something which underpins the false reality which is created upon it.

To own Gold is to own both a commodity which is assigned a Currency value as well as a piece of the next framework, a piece of the next network. Everything else is which is going on is just noise and distractions to the masses....'Bread and Circuses'.

Currently, we are seeing suppression in Gold. I believe the reasoning behind this is to buy-time, enough time so that the framework and network have sufficient Gold reserves to restart the system and a long enough period of time so that the Gold buying is invisible to the general public, so as to avoid a panic or 'run'. In any case, the next cycle is inevitable and it is coming whether we like it or not, or whether we are prepared or not.

-1 The main problem for Cypriots is that there is nothing for them to physically attack. The "leaders" are phantoms who go to and come from meetings in secret places. There is no target. Even if they torch the Central Bank building it does nothing to the actual machinery of the financial system. They could possibly burn the Parliment building but the MPs did the right thing by not going along with the first assault wave regarding the "hair cuts", and they were bypassed by the Executive branch.

IMO the only thing they can do is passive resistance. A complete withdrawal of any activity which might support government funding. Essentially going Galt.

If they burned down town it would just be their own property they were burning. Makes no sense.

31 Post WWII, but perhaps earlier, it 0 was realised that Gold must be removed from the financial system. The excuse given was that it impaired the Banking Systems' ability to expand and therefore protection 'US' from future crises (Keynesianism). A lie which even the bankers bought into...why wouldn't they?!

The real reason Gold was systematically removed from the financial system (Globally) was to place it even deeper into the financial system (LOL). A Gold Standard is akin to Gold acting like the mortar between the financial bricks of the Global Economic Building however, removing the Gold simply meant that Gold then flowed into private vaults of the same entities who owned the Gold within Central Bank vaults in the first place. They merely relocated the financial strength.

The Gold was replaced by 'Promise To Pay' and it flowed into the foundations on which the entire building is built (BIS etc). In this way, the building can be knocked down and rebuilt, using the foundations over and over again. The Gold never left the structure at all, it was merely reassigned.

So, instead of Gold being used as the mortar between the bricks of the Global Economic Building, we have 'Good Will', and good will can be expanded easily...but it can also erode just as quickly (faith). This is why we will either see a Global Financial Reboot, or, they will push Gold back up into the Mortar (Bond backing).

In essence, the removal of Gold meant that the nature of the system transformed from 'Fixed' to 'Recyclable', so long as the foundations are retained.

I don't envisage Gold as money, or currency, or even wealth, that's too rigid. It's like a Stem Cell; it can be grown into other things.

Just because Gold may re-enter the system doesn't mean ownership changes.

Also, don't think that Central Bank Gold Reserves being leased out is criminal, because the entities who own the Central Banks are the same people who are leasing the Gold, as well as all the intermediaries in-between.

So what's happening in Cyprus? Well, Cyprus is the very first indicator of two things, they are;

1. That currency really isn't owned by the depositor and is in fact owned by the representative Central Bank, and in turn, by the owning Banks, and in turn again, by the mob I discussed originally.
2. That the Global Central Banking cartel has blocked all the exits by taking over every other Central Bank in the world, or is very close to it.

"Give me the power to issue a nation's money; then I do not care who makes the law"

And that about all there is to it.

I wonder if a 'Promise To pay' includes food rations?

0 TSP, gold has always struck me as a mortar of sorts, but as a medium of valuing sovereign currencies against each other. So if Japan inflates away the Yen, the number of Yen required to buy an ounce of gold should increase. But if at the same time the Dollar is not inflated the price of gold, in Dollars, should remain the same. Thus it should cost more Yen to buy a Dollar. I see Gold as having been the useful medium to value currencies, i.e. the value of one nation's currency against another nation's currency when one or even a few nations decide to inflate. A different situation arises, in my mind, when all nations inflate at the same time. If all inflate then the medium of gold would seem to be valuing all inflating currencies against gold, i.e., all currencies should lose value because the holders of the gold will not want to sell their gold to receive a currency that is worth less due to inflation. Do you have any thoughts on this matter?

Currently, we are 3410919 seeing suppression in Gold. I believe the reasoning behind this is to buy-time, enough time so that the framework and network have sufficient Gold reserves to restart the system

The suppression of gold prices works because people are stupid. The sheep "invest" in things that are rising in price – for fear that they will miss out on what is already behind them – and "divest" of things falling in price – because of a wiring problem that makes them unable to recognize when a sale is on.

But if you believe the motive is to accumulate gold to "restart" the system, I believe you are mistaken. The purpose of hoarding the true money foundation is to recalibrate the system. It is ultimately about a forced transfer of sovereignty. The people of Cyprus are guinea PIGS.

I think you need to see just how deep a significance a "forced transfer of sovereignty" would actually be. The outcome would be very similar to what I'm suggesting...ignoring the picture and color changes on meaningless pieces of paper.

Oh I see the significance. That is the broadest view of what is going on. The currency issues are simply a conduit to what is a grand power play by self-loathing people who collaborate to subordinate the masses. We may be saying the same thing, but your use of the phrase "restart the system" conveys a benign intent. There is nothing benign about what is going on and the ambitions behind it.

Whether the solution be benign or otherwise, the owners of this system (assuming they exist) have two fundamental problems, they are;

1. A failing financial system, which they own, in which they derive wealth and status from (so, gotta keep it going or start a new one similar).

2. An overpopulating world which will kill itself if it continues.

They are damned if they do and dammed if they don't. In the end, both problems will be solved via a single solution...and it ain't pretty!

NOTE: If my thoughts on all this turn out to be even remotely close, then we must think of Agenda21 in its' corrects terms....A 'Tennancy Agreement', as scary as that sounds, AND, the possession of Gold to reduce ones' usufructuary exposure.

0 "medicine" has side effects. Gold price suppression causes silver to be artificially cheap. Peeps/sheep blindly follow the leader. Some buy while others sell, but almost EVERYBODY is doing what they see others doing. Humans are very much herd animals. Seems to me that only about five peeps out of a hundred are capable of original thought, irrespective of whatever cohort you're in, no matter how high an ivory tower.

PMs are not the only manipulated market. Look at last Thursday 3/28 when USDA issued a number for corn stocks with 400 million bushels coming out of nowhere at noon ET. Less than 2 minutes later May corn was lock limit down 40 cents and today a new 2013 low, dragging down beans and diverging from wheat. There's a pairs trade for ya! ZCK3-ZWK3 went from -10 to +60 cents. All 'cause of one number in a monthly release that could have been a mistake! Just one number with no footnote, ~200 million bushels higher than the most "bearish" analyst with the consensus being the 3/28 USDA report would push prices higher. Not. Next Wednesday April 10 the full-enchilada big-time WASDE will have the breakdown, but till then the market acts as if USDA is like Moses talkin to God. If there are any real traders here, don't miss the grains next week. So we got that crazy disjointed ag market with two major reports in a week, fallout of cheap corn rallying meats, and on top of all that the grain trading hours are going back to more like it used to be before the 21-hr continuous trading we have now. Beginning Sunday night April 7 Globex grain/oilseed trading opens 3 hours later than usual, coinciding exactly with the 9 AM opening of Chinese trading. The only time that market has opens exact same as China were unusual post-holiday delayed US opens. So my thinking is that the algos won't know what to do for quite a while because the clock is all out of whack. Trading is easier in the evening when it's mostly humans and the new shortened hours should put more oomph into that new 9 PM EDT open.

Something like this analysis usually either:
1) goes over peoples heads 'cause they can't 'handle the truth'
2) invokes cries of 'conspiracy buffs' and the derision that accompanies it

The only thing I might add is that I can't quite place the role of the BRICs (especially Russia and China) in the future scheme of things. Possibly they might be beyond the reach of the "Custodians" ...although I suspect the Custodians are furiously trying to draw them in as semi-equals (disingenuously, to be sure).

China has been Cyber Attacking Australia's Reserve Bank. The RBA claims the Chinese are leaving bread crumbs but they are attempting to find out what RBA's Rates will be doing. Maybe so, but I personally believe that China is trying to find out what the RBA is thinking and doing about Australia's Gold Reserves.

If this assumption is correct, then it stands to reason that BRICS are perhaps trying to make sure they're are well ahead of the curve.

Remember, Australia is part of the Commonwealth. Australia's' Intelligence Agencies are closely knitted to the United Kingdoms, as with Canada's (SIS {Mi6} = ASIS = CSIS). They have very similar structures and that's not a coincidence.

Although China and Australia's trading relationship and citizenry are quite close, China is very aware that the Commonwealth and the Peoples' Republic of China are chalk and cheese.

Good work, been wanting to put down on paper what's in my head! You've done it for me :) When you talk of gold do you only see gold or gold and silver. Different beasts in many ways, but both extremely valuable, one as a pure store of value, one as with extremely important uses as well as a store of value.

One question, gold and silver – do they need to be monetised? Just unmanipulated and allowed to show their true value. Admittedly in a comparison to currencies, but only to give people a sense of their comparative worth against other tangible assets – property, land, oil as you would only trade physical for other tangible assets not bog paper?

well done two short planks, thought and framing of discussion in such a distillized post is rare, and i wish i could up arrow it 100 times.

you can modulate either the frequency or the amplitude to achieve any desired return over a given period of time the cumulative value of one's losses is meaningless without the cumulative value of profits and the periodicity.
 For example an etrade baby with five figures of monopoly money can churn a million dollars of trading volume per day, which work out to ONE QUARTER OF A BILLION bernanke bucks per year. At 1% amplitude he would have $2.5 million in cumulative loses which would be offset by at least $2.5 million in cumulative gains (if he was actually a professional trader or the algo alter ego of one).

3 The 00:37 | 3411127
0 banksters probably don't care if the Cypriots set the country on fire. It's little skin off their noses.

But if the rest of Europe, or even parts of Europe, drain down their holdings in their banks, now THAT could upset the bankers' applectarts.

9 Cyprus is the test | 3410852
 0 bubble for the larger economies of Europe, Spain, Italy et al. To see how it goes over. To see if the sheeple protesteth too much. To determine how much of the peoples wealth they can steal outright with out consequences for themselves. Bigger grabs are certain. In the USSofA, a smallish State like Delaware or Maine would serve the same purpose. The real show starts when the tests are complete and the evil mother#####ing banksters go whole hog. Naked unadulterated theft. Open and in the Sunshine. I have nothing left to do but wait and watch.

Financing and sales of expensive Defense equipment to small countries, which causes serious debt problems, and now without the ability to inflate the currency. In a way the Cypriots have been importing the Greek Gov't debts, by purchasing their bonds, and thereby financing their Defense buildup. An odd situation is made odder still by the Russian money from dual citizens. Perhaps Tyler should devote a column to how all these small countries are given free money in Defense credits to vote a certain way in the UN. I had an Argentine co-worker in Australia once tell me that all the stuff they got from the Yanks (under Peron), half-tracks and such was all rusting away in a few years, probably junk to begin with and then not properly maintained. Someone once said that "you can do almost anything with bayonets except sit on them". The whole business about turning swords into plowshares is questionable. Killing equipment is really only good for killing. But you still had to exchange some wealth for it....
