Medical Freedom Leaders Ask RFK
Jr.: How Would You Fix U.S. Health Policy?

Democratic presidential candidate
Robert F. Kennedy Jr. on Tuesday hosted a roundtable discussion with leading critics of prevailing health policy who debated topics ranging from public health agency capture to climate change.

Approximately 11,000 viewers watched live as Dr. Pierre Kory, Maureen McDonnell, Mikki Willis, Dr. Joseph Mercola, Patrick Gentempo, Dr. Sherri Tenpenny, Sayer Ji and Del Bigtree asked Kennedy, founder and chairman on leave from Children's Health Defense (CHD), a series of questions about how his administration would address key issues of concern to the medical freedom movement.

"This is the moment when the collapsing center, the disintegrating center, the dysfunctional health system finally opens up and what has so long been 'alternative' might become a new mainstream that could transform the health of this country," roundtable facilitator and author Charles Eisenstein said, kicking off the discussion.

McDonnell, a holistic pediatric nurse and founder of Millions Against Medical Mandates, asked Kennedy how he would transform a healthcare system from one controlled by Big Pharma “where for every ailment there’s a drug and for every infection there’s a vaccine or one in the pipeline” to one that treats the root causes of the illnesses and chronic conditions plaguing the nation.

Kennedy said Pharma’s “mercantile ambitions” have been allowed to overwhelm the healthcare system, and conflicts of interest have to be eliminated.

That includes ending advertising by Pharma, redirecting grants toward studying chronic diseases, making public health data such as the Vaccine Safety Datalink available to researchers, and having the U.S. Department of Justice hold journals accountable for “racketeering with the pharmaceutical industry to systematically lie to the public,” he said.

Kory, founder and president of Front Line COVID-19 Critical Care Alliance, asked Kennedy if expanding funding for the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to expand oversight and data collection would help to ensure commercial and political bias stayed out of research.

Kennedy said he thought NIH didn't need more money, it needed a new focus.

He said NIH ought to study the etiology of chronic disease rather than studying infectious diseases, which pose a lesser threat to human health, and incubating new pharmaceutical products. NIH scientists personally profit from inventing new products, which is a practice he said needs to end.

Most importantly, Kennedy said, he would "end all gain-of-function research," which he said is just a disaster. "It's given us no benefits. It's given us everything from Lyme disease to COVID and many many other diseases."

Gentempo talked about the "tyranny [that] can take hold all in the name of medicine and all in the name of science" as seen during the COVID-19 pandemic. He asked what Kennedy thought could be done so it never happens again.

"We need to make it clear that the Constitution is inviolable and that even in an emergency, the most dire emergency, you can't waive the Constitution and that you have to go through the Democratic process," Kennedy said. To protect that, he said, Congress must change the criteria for declaring states of emergency.

Osteopath and natural health specialist Mercola talked about the suppression of dissenting ideas. "The Biden regime has been the most authoritarian administration in the United States' history," he said, and ideas like those being discussed in the round table were "relentlessly censored from head to toe."

Kennedy said this censorship was a betrayal of liberal ideology, which "is about ideas ... triumphing in the marketplace of ideas."

He talked about the recent controversy over his proposed debate with Dr. Peter Hotez, where people defending Hotez's refusal to debate did so on the grounds that he is an "expert" who should not debate non-experts.

Kennedy said:

"What they're saying is there's kind of a high priesthood of people who are experts, and they should not debate anybody else because they're the high priest and they should just be trusted. ...

"Now what they can say is, well, I'm a crazy person. And it, you know, and it, it just gives credence to my crazy ideas. But my ... crazy ideas already have credence. ...

"By the way, science is rooted in reason. It's rooted in empiricism. And if you can't defend science on the battlefield of reason ... you're not really a scientist, as I or any scientist is expected to defend their hypothesis in debate, in heated, fierce debate."

Responding to Tenpenny's question about how he would select his medical advisory team, Kennedy said he would draw from his extensive network of people with government, public health and scientific experience — people like Kory and Dr. Meryl Nass.

He added that his advisors would be dissidents who were moving away from the pharmaceutical paradigm to “center all of our objectives on actual metrics that show better health.”

Sayer Ji, the founder of alternative medicine portal GreenMedInfo, asked Kennedy where he stood on the World Health Organization (WHO) pandemic treaty and the proposed amendments to the International Health Regulations, which he said could threaten U.S. sovereignty.

“Under my presidency, we’re not going to be submitting to any WHO treaty, and I’m going to be really reevaluating the U.S. relationship with the WHO on a lot of bases,” Kennedy said.

He said the WHO previously did important work, rooted in localized processes and contexts, but that today the WHO has been “hijacked by big corporations who want to promote their technologies and promote one cookie cutter technology for every problem.”

Willis, who produced the “Plandemic” documentaries, told Kennedy that as a veteran environmental activist, he was concerned with the way “the climate change narrative has been grossly exaggerated by power-hungry politicians,” and asked whether Kennedy agreed with that assessment and how he would retell the climate story.

Kennedy said he believes climate change is an existential threat. He said as an outdoorsman, he watched the climate change, and the idea that carbon traps heat has long been known.

He also said he studied the science produced as early as the 1970s by the Exxon scientists who predicted the corporation’s practices would have devastating climatic effects.

But he agreed with Willis that the “climate narrative has been hijacked” by actors such as the World Economic Forum, Bill Gates and other elites “to consolidate their power, diminish democracy, constrict civil and human rights, and to impose top-down totalitarian controls.”

Kennedy proposed a “market-based” rather than top-down approach to dealing with climate issues, where the cheapest and most efficient energy sources would be rewarded.

Those would generally be renewable sources, he said, providing examples of the environmental costs created by coal and gas exploitation that would have to be internalized in the type of system he's advocating.

He added that people didn't have to believe in global warming to see that coal dependency has to end.

Tenpenny said Kennedy's position on vaccines had been mixed and asked for clarification about whether he was against vaccines.

"I'm not against vaccines any more than I'm against medicine," Kennedy said, adding that he would support a vaccine if there was evidence it made people safer and healthier.

But, he added that he was against vaccine mandates and all medical mandates.

Finally, McDonnell brought up the challenges of building collaboration in the health freedom movement and asked Kennedy how he would deal with political divisions on all of these issues, and beyond.

He said he thought people's anger is rooted in the fact that they are being lied to, censored and gaslighted. "The principal antidote for that is a government that is just rigorously truthful," he said.

Documentarian and journalist Bigtree, who spoke last, said the health freedom movement is "truly a people's movement. And it doesn't matter what the media says about it. They will not be able to stop us."

Vice and Rolling Stone immediately published articles criticizing the roundtable and its panelists.

YES, MIKKI WILLIS! BOBBY: Your position on the issue of climate change being a man-made aberration from a naturally occurring phenomenon that has characterized the earth and driven its geological, geographic and biological evolution since its inception is concerning. And the solutions proposed by the Left are driven by political, profit, power and control motives, are already doing significant environmental damage, like most ill-conceived, short-sighted solutions for non-existent problems.

The absurdity of the solutions currently being implemented for a non-existent problem, e.g., population (Congo), biological, and environmentally destructive windmills, batteries and solar panels, constitute an absolute fraud, just like the SARS-CoV-2 pandemic and the toxic, often lethal Covid-19 "vaccines," which are still being pushed and destroying lives in the present.

I find this ray of sunshine, this symposium, a bit of validation that I have not been putting my attention into the wrong people. These are my heroes, and my tears while watching this were tears of relief that somehow, someday, these concerns would be addressed. I find my nervous system is so OVER being lied to. I find these lies demand that I rest a lot. Anyone else?

Bobby: I just read on Getter/ War Room that you are "anti-gun" and "pro abortion". The terminology used makes me distrust that this statement is true, but I would suggest that you create a page on your website clarifying what your positions are on these and other controversial issues.

To get crucial CONTEXT on climate change check out a short book with lots of graphs by a geologist by the name of Wrightstone. The ebook version can be freely viewed and download on archive.org. I'll make it easy for folks and drop the link below:

Eisenstein has the good take (In my opinion) on this I remember, and one I've shared for many years and that is a focus on pollution, not CO2. Pollution is known to be bad by the vast majority if not every single human on the planet. Who likes to breathe toxic air, drink water or swim in water contaminated by pollutants or eat toxic food?

Princeton scientists have stated that CO2 absorbs a specific spectrum of light, and to raise the temperature by 1 degrees it takes twice as much CO2 as is currently is in the atmosphere, then the next 1 degrees takes twice as much CO2 as exists at that time (2x, then 4x, then 8X etc). CO2 is not toxic, only 0.4% (not even half of 1 percent) of the atmosphere. It makes plants grow faster. Why not just plant more trees? There are probably other variables related to the environment that are more important than CO2 like don't let mercury get into rivers and streams. Nobody should feel guilty about breathing out CO2. If you meditate under a tree you might imagine that tree loves your CO2. I think habitat protection is a reasonable approach with a better understanding of the pertinent variables. There have probably been times in the earth's past that the climate was warmer and plenty of life thriving. To go further in being a de alarmist, a gradually rising sea level is not a civilization threatening process with plenty of time to adjust for the gradual process. Wars and mobs of people can probably destroy real estate much faster. I'm not saying we should have a lazy attitude about it, but the alarmism is overboard.

Yeah, I may return to the Dem party, not sure yet. The last Dem I voted for was Jimmy Carter. That was a disaster. If I vote, RFK, Jr., it will be for the man and coattails be damned. I will only vote for people who stand with him...be they Republican or Democrat.

Watching from Brazil, link obtained via article by Dr. Mercola.

As a messenger, in Brazil, of the fake Covid-19 pandemic, I need to be aware of what is happening in the USA.

This is all well and good but if you're protecting children how do you stand on abortion. What about the corruption of the FBI and DOJ? :Your medical reforms sound great but we do need to know how we are going to take back America.

Getting rid of CO2 means getting rid of PEOPLE. That's part of the WORLD ECONOMIC FORUM AGENDA and Bill Gates.

The climate change issue is a problem for me, if he believes it is anthropogenic. How about just end climate engineering----Dane Wiggington. The earth can heal itself, and humans can come up with solutions to using less oil and eventually wean us from fossil fuels.

Good man! He is pro abortion however that's now in the hands of the states. I don't care for the climate change perspective. I vote republican but would be satisfied with his leadership in the White House as President or any capacity. Thank you for this symposium.

Is he pro abortion? If yes then his stance on these vaccines is hypocritical. We need clarification.

All these RFK, Jr health experts that all totally ignore the deuterium factors in health, as well as the main motive for why JFK was killed.

Either expose and deal with deuterium in health issues or be dummed out of politics

A lot of things aren't adding up here. A year or two ago, I looked at his 'climate change' website. It was HUGE and there were PAGES OF DONORS, all the top elitists....Hillary Clinton, Bill & Melinda Gates, Jeff Bezos, etc. etc. etc. That climate change website was taken down/ hidden. Nowhere to be found. Pretty sure it was linked to his CHD website but it impossible to find now. If anyone has seen it recently and can share a link, that would be appreciated. If I could have foreseen this situation that he would suddenly throw his hat in the ring for president, I would have screenshot his pages. Maybe I did and forgot. But he's not being upfront. He's a politician.

Not like his uncle or father, but a politician of these times who says what he has to say to play the game.

He doesn't even seem to understand that vaccines are completely UNNECESSARY and were created to harm and not help. How can he be talking about vaccines when he doesn't even understand that basic simple truth about pharma? Based on what he has said and continues to say, he doesn't understand the whole picture or the depths of the corruption, imo. Vaccines harm. ALL of them harm. They were created to harm. When he says that loudly, maybe I'll listen to him. But it doesn't matter. At the end of the day, President Trump is still the rightful President and the CiC and he will be President again.

Damn I love RFK jr ... BUT he is WRONG about the Climate Change HOAX. He'll make a good VP candidate to Trump but I want him NOWHERE near the economy.

Damn.

For this being a "Health Policy" talk, I really don't hear anything about what he would do to change the policies. What about making it mandatory that insurance companies cover any kind of treatment, as long as it works. Spinal decompression has been around for years, and yet the insurance companies still consider it "experimental." If it keeps a person from having surgery and it works and helps a person, cover the treatment. Also, he talks about vaccines, but what about natural remedies that help people. Also, we want anyone that was involved in what happened for the last 3 yrs. punished for their actions and crimes that were committed against the people.
