In June 2021, the U.S. National Security Council released a new “National Strategy for Countering Domestic Terrorism.”¹ While it’s being largely framed as a tool to fight White supremacy and political extremism, the definition of what constitutes a “domestic terrorist” is incredibly vague and based on ideologies.

In a podcast with one of my favorite independent journalists, Whitney Webb,² Media Roots Radio host Robbie Martin notes how this creates a dangerous slippery slope, one that’s connected to the attempts to have increased surveillance and tracking of Americans’ data after 9/11.³

The “War on Terror,” launched in the aftermath of the September 11 attacks, Martin says, “was merely a prelude to a larger domestic crackdown on political dissidents.”⁴ Webb agreed, stating that we’re “near the bottom part of the slippery slope” already, and it’s not a stretch that one day anyone who disagrees with the government could be labeled a domestic terrorist and charged with a crime.

Criminalizing Oppositional Ideology to the Ruling Class

The whole justification for the War on Terror was to target “precrime”, or terror acts before they happen. Initially, the legislation was meant to target foreign governments and individuals, but bills are pending that would make the legislation applicable to Americans in the U.S.⁵

Investigative journalist Glenn Greenwald stated that the end goal of the newly emerging war on domestic terrorism is to "essentially criminalize any oppositional ideology to the ruling class," adding, "There is literally nothing that could be more dangerous, and it's not fear-mongering or alarmism to say it.”⁶

This isn't a partisan issue, but something that's been in the works for decades. Greenwald stated that viewing Washington as Democrat versus Republican, with one side being “your team” and the other being “your enemy” is a flawed belief, as an elite ruling class is truly in power:⁷

“There is a ruling class elite that is extremely comfortable with the establishment wings of both parties ... who they fund equally because those are the people who serve their agenda. Then there's a whole other group of people at whose expense they rule in. Some consider them on the left, some on the right,” but “it's time to break down those barriers.”

It's important to understand that the U.S. already has aggressive criminal laws in place, such that more people are imprisoned in the U.S. than anywhere else in the world.⁸ Do we need further laws to criminalize people put in place? A concerning pivot has occurred as well, shifting in focus to the FBI targeting this new model of terrorism while the terms like “incitement to violence” have been radically expanded in meaning.

“It is accompanied by viral-on-social-media pleas that one work with the FBI to turn in one's fellow citizens (“See Something, Say Something!”) and demands for a new system of domestic surveillance,” Greenwald wrote.⁹

People Who Spread ‘Disinformation’ Classified as Extremists

You don't have to be violent to be declared a terrorist. You may simply have what the government deems to be “extremist views” or could be accused of spreading disinformation — although there's no clear definition of what “disinformation” is.

According to Webb:¹⁰

“There is talk in the domestic terror strategy that people who spread disinformation can also be classified as extremists and a threat to national security and, of course, we’ve seen over the past several years, how this disinformation label can be applied to independent media as a way to promote censorship of voices that are critical of U.S. empire, among other things, or that just don’t fit a particular government narrative.”

As taken directly from the National Strategy for Countering Domestic Terrorism:¹¹

“Domestic terrorists have — particularly in recent years — often been lone actors or small groups of informally aligned individuals who mobilize to violence with little or no clear organizational structure or direction. These individuals often consume material deliberately disseminated to recruit individuals to causes that attempt to provide a sense of belonging and fulfillment, however false that sense might be.

Their ideologies can be fluid, evolving, and overlapping. And they can, in some instances, connect and intersect with conspiracy theories and other forms of disinformation and misinformation ...

These elements combine to form a complex and shifting domestic terrorism threat landscape and create significant challenges for law enforcement. Especially on Internet-based communications platforms such as social media, file-upload sites, and end-to-end encrypted platforms, all of these elements can combine and amplify threats to public safety.

... These efforts speak to a broader priority: enhancing faith in government and addressing the extreme polarization, fueled by a crisis of disinformation and misinformation often channeled through social media platforms, which can tear Americans apart and lead some to violence.”

Fusion Centers Are Ready and Waiting

Webb is concerned about fusion centers, at which the Department of Homeland Security, FBI, NGOs and others in the private sector collaborate to decide who's a terrorist and who's not.

Fusion centers have been around for a while, but as the war on domestic terror progresses, Webb believes that fusion centers will take on the same role as the CIA-run Phoenix Program during the Vietnam War, which was designed to collate names of dissidents and people with extremist sympathies to databases so they could be pursued by the relevant authorities – many ended up being kidnapped, tortured and killed.

Fusion centers are waiting to take on a more active role in the newly declared war on domestic terrorism, but in order for them to gain widespread acceptance, Webb believes that an outrageous event needs to take place – one that goes further than the January 6, 2021, storming of the U.S. Capitol, such as something that targets civilians and sparks outrage among the U.S. public that something must be done.

“This is why I worry that some other event may take place in order to push this strategy further. They're setting up an infrastructure here that they plan to use, right? And I think given the current climate in the U.S. it would be hard for them to justify taking that where the strategy clearly shows they want to go,” Webb says.¹²

She also draws parallels between the present day and the U.S.-backed Operation Condor, which targeted leftists, suspected leftists and their sympathizers, resulting in the murders of an estimated 60,000 people, about half of which occurred in Argentina. Another 500,000 were politically imprisoned.¹³

“There was no investigation into whether the claims against these people were even true,” Webb explained. “There were no trials ... it was a dragnet to create reorganized society using a climate of fear to encourage acquiescence to authority and complete obedience to the state.”¹⁴ It’s history that often gives the greatest clues about where society is headed, and Webb also details a bill President Biden introduced in 1995 in response to the Oklahoma City bombing.

It was initiated by the FBI as a charter to investigate political groups and included the following disturbing points. Fortunately, the bill wasn’t passed in this version – a lot was taken out and watered down – but if allowed to pass unrevised, it would have:¹⁵

Allowed the FBI, military and other groups to investigate political groups at their will, without any higher-up approval

Allowed a 10-year prison sentence for the crime of supporting the lawful activities of an organization if the president deemed the organization a terrorist entity

Made it so that the president alone decides who is a terrorist, and the decision could not be appealed

Loosened rules for wire taps

Reversed the presumption of innocent until proven guilty

Allowed the military to be used in domestic law enforcement activities and potentially made it legal for soldiers to invade people’s homes and take possessions without probable cause

Allowed secret trials for immigrants not charged with a crime, and allowed the use of illegally obtained evidence in those trials

Silicon Valley Is Fused With the National Security State

Silicon Valley and the national security state are now fused, Webb says. The decadeslong wars against domestic dissidence have always involved technology like databases, and now the link is inseparable.

Webb wrote about “tech tyranny” at the start of the pandemic, revealing that a document from the National Security Commission on Artificial Intelligence (NSCAI) — acquired through a FOIA request — said changes were needed to keep a technological advantage over China:¹⁶

“This document suggests that the U.S. follow China’s lead and even surpass them in many aspects related to AI-driven technologies, particularly their use of mass surveillance.

This perspective clearly clashes with the public rhetoric of prominent U.S. government officials and politicians on China, who have labeled the Chinese government’s technology investments and export of its surveillance systems and other technologies as a major ‘threat’ to Americans’ ‘way of life.’”

Many of the steps to implement the program are being promoted as part of the COVID-19 pandemic response. NSCAI is not only a key part of the Great Reset’s fourth industrial revolution, but also promotes mass surveillance, online-only shopping and the end of cash while noting that “having streets carpeted with cameras is good infrastructure.”

NSCAI’s chairman is Eric Schmidt, the former head of Alphabet, Google’s parent company. Other notable Silicon Valley NSCAI members include:¹⁷

- Eric Horvitz, director of Microsoft Research Labs

- Andy Jassy, CEO of Amazon Web Services (CIA contractor)
- Andrew Moore, head of Google Cloud AI

Meanwhile, Greenwald highlighted a statement by Alex Stamos, a former Facebook security official, who recommends social media companies collaborate with law enforcement to crack down on extremist influencers online, especially those with large audiences in order to “get us all back in the same consensual reality.”¹⁸

Social Media Plays a Huge Role in the War

If you're reading this and are concerned, I urge you to listen to the Media Roots Radio podcast with Whitney Webb in full.¹⁹ It's just under 2.5 hours, but time well spent to understand the historical events that have led us to where we are today. For those who want to take action, a mass exodus from social media platforms is a good start.

Many suspect Facebook is the public-friendly version of the Pentagon's Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) Lifelog, a database project aimed at tracking the minutiae of people's entire existence for national security surveillance purposes.²⁰

The Pentagon pulled the plug on Lifelog February 4, 2004, in response to backlash over privacy concerns.²¹ Yet that same day, Facebook was launched.²²

Lifelog – and likely its successor Facebook – was meant to complement Total Information Awareness (TIA), a program that sprang up after the 9/11 attacks that was seeking to collect Americans' medical records, fingerprints and other biometric data, along with DNA and records relating to personal finances, travel and media consumption.²³

Now Facebook is asking users to report “extremist” content and misinformation.

Fortunately, there's a way to passively disentangle yourself from the data mining and legacy social media that is intertwined with the war on domestic terror. Webb says: "Delete your Facebook and your Instagram and your Twitter, because you are feeding the domestic terror machine."²⁴

"Glenn Greenwald stated that the end goal of the newly emerging war on domestic terrorism is to "essentially criminalize any oppositional ideology to the ruling class," adding, "There is literally nothing that could be more dangerous, and it's not fear-mongering or alarmism to say it."

INDEED: video features the amazing declaration from former Facebook security official Alex Stamos, talking to the very concerned CNN host Brian Stelter, about the need for social media companies to use the same tactics against U.S. citizens that they used to remove ISIS from the internet – " Press freedoms are being abused by these actors," the former Facebook executive proclaimed."

"there are people on YouTube, for example, that have a larger audience than people on daytime CNN" – and it's time for CNN and other mainstream outlets to seize the monopoly on information dissemination to which they are divinely entitled by taking away the platforms of those whom people actually want to watch and listen to

This is a much more aggressive extension against personal freedoms than that posted on investigative journalist Glenn Greenwald's blog, The Intercept, has published the US government document detailing the rules for putting names on the database. Terrorism Data, a 166-page set of guidelines that the Justice Department has tried to treat as a state secret. Government officials have said its disclosure would provide "a clear roadmap" on how potential terrorists are identified and tracked.

The government's secret rules for including people in its main terrorist database, as well as the Banned Persons List and the Selected List, which triggers enhanced detection at airports and border crossings. The new guidelines allow individuals to be designated as representatives of terrorist organizations without any evidence that they are actually connected to such organizations, and gives a single White House official the unilateral authority to place "categories." It expands the authority of government officials to "nominate" people to watch lists based on what is loosely described as "piecemeal information."

“A mass exodus from social media platforms is a good start.” We need to vote with our cursor or mouse, el-graf or whatever connects us to social media. For years I have been advocating divorce from Fakebook and similar platforms. What may have started as a friendly on line social club or convenient platform for information and commerce has morphed into the many headed hydra of Greek mythology. Cut off one head and another grows in its place. I had no insider knowledge of Zuckerberg nor his philosophy, morals and business model, but instinct told me to be wary of sharing of information that could be used for other purposes. It seems that instinct was correct - now that the reality of its multiple roles in censorship, self-appointed arbiter of truth (and now government spy agency) has kicked in. We know and trust Dr M to keep our information safe, we know about his role in helping us stay healthy and we know that he seeks and shares the truth about the globalist forces that threaten us. Now we know that ‘free’ Fakebook and silicon valley technocracy exacts a heavy price on our freedom. Voluntary slavery is like corporate philanthropy - a fool's paradise. “What thoughtful rich people call the problem of poverty, thoughtful poor people call the problem of riches.” (‘No Such Thing as a Free Gift’, by Lynsey McGooey, 2015).

Here in the UK I have just started reading Tragedy and Hope, A History of The World In Our Time by Carroll Quigley. Again, I recently bought Enough Already, Time to end the war on terrorism by Scott Horton, which book I believe everyone needs to read. For several years, primarily due to a quite innocent action by me, (early 2017, needing to find a copy of the third book "WAR" of the trilogy; Journey from Obscurity by Harold Owen, as I had incorrectly named his brother Wilfred in a comment in a book I was about to publish), I had travelled to Winchester and was looking for the University Library and had asked a young woman for directions . . . who showed an interest in me, but as I was in a hurry, I took her directions and carried on to find the book. So a year later, I decided to see if I could find her and stood outside of the Army museum for what must have been a couple of hours, but did not succeed and went back to get on the bus for home . . . only to discover that I seemed to be being followed. Indeed, the same man from then onward's continued to follow me. I even went to the Winchester Police to report who I am and left my card.

Now, today, and for the past few years I have had a neighbour who I gather works for an UK government agency, who was entering my garden at all hours and by setting a trap confirmed who it is and acted immediately to prevent his continuing access to my home. Afterwards I also discovered that he had sprayed battery acid on my vegetables, which I had been very proud of earlier in the year and had showed him where they were growing. Two weeks ago, someone sprayed acid over my garden fence onto my Marrow plants, but had hit the top of an young Apple tree, which seems to have taken the full damage.

The question is why? And; Who are we dealing with?

We are facing the actions of a group of individuals that are morally and ethically bankrupt . . . whose own careers have only produced constant failure . . . a financially bankrupt nation.

We must not direct our ire towards the military. Their entire existence depends upon their always following the orders given to them by our elected government; for the military to do otherwise constitutes complete breakdown of their responsibilities to their respective nations.

We must recognise that our problems stem from the civil servants that advise our governments as to what actions are the best direction for government policy. Yes, we could all agree that the decisions are always made by our elected politicians; but a lifetime has taught me that almost every politician is a child of their party organisation . . . whose nomination serves the interest of their party, first and foremost . . . and as such they do not have any true grounding in the wider needs of their nation's citizens. So the stabilising influence must stem from their civil servants; their direct advisors.

By chance of birth, I have knowledge about the senior levels of the British civil service, my Uncle Peter Boyt was Clerk of Works to the House of Commons . . . but of much greater importance to this debate, he was what is described as an "Exclusive" . . . a member of a religious group called The Plymouth Brethren. Exclusives are in fact by far the most fundamental religious group imaginable. They are not allowed to read newspapers, listen to the radio, watch television. Their families are not permitted to have any contact with ANYONE outside of their religion. My eldest brother once told me never to try and make contact; "he will slam the door in your face while calling you a heathen". Anyone trying to leave an Exclusive family has to also lose everything, their wife, children, home . . . they lose everything, as I have discovered as a member of uncle Peter's family did so . . . lose everything.

These are the senior advisors to the British government; it is my understanding that a similar group are in exactly the same advisory position to the US government.

So where do we go from here?

Posted On 08/13/2021

ChrisColes

What any free nation needs but does not presently enjoy, is advisors that are not from an obscure religious group; that do not demonstrate a complete acceptance of their ethical and moral duty to observe the law that underpins the very existence of our civilisations; civilisations; to be ruled under law.

It is the rule of law that is our only defence. Not religion, not the military, and not the rule of an obscure fundamentalist religious group that rejects civilised discussion about any subject other than their own . . . our only true defence is complete acceptance of the rule of the law; it is common law that marks out the responsibilities of any advisor to our respective governments.

We must do everything we can to support any and all actions being proposed . . . under the rule of the law. "We The People" always acting under the rule of our common law; must ensure that from now onwards our respective nation's are always advised by those that show their full respect for the rule of law.

One last thought is very important. A corrupt advisor will not find any support from any citizen who is open minded and abides by the rule of the law. The only people they can find to do their "work" of disrupting the lives of law abiding peaceful citizens are the likes of one who will spray acid on a garden; knowingly follow them around without any lawful charge against them. And that is how the likes of a Stazi or a KGB was formed. Once any government acts to suppress any open discussion about their actions; such suppression of debate eventually leads to complete abandonment of ethical and morality based civilisation. Such leadership is not from "the most powerful person on the planet"; it is from the weakest; someone that has abandoned civilisation for the classic . . . handful of silver cast at their feet.

The ultimate unwavering responsibility for what is going on today lies with judges, barristers, attorneys and all other officers of the law; Justice must be delivered.

I think Mr. Russell has part of the puzzle for why "justice is not being delivered" in the following quote:

"And then there is OMERTA – a shutdown of help. A cover-up conspiracy to pervert the course of justice, by ensuring that there is no proper investigation. Once the secret intelligence agencies are involved, people are too scared to help - police, politicians, lawyers, media and human rights agencies. All the normal support structures and avenues for resolving grievances simply freeze up." <https://www.roderickrussell.ca>

And be humorous whenever possible, like parodying their agenda with one-liners like: "I don't tolerate any opposing views, I'm not an extremist", or: "Gee, what reason is there not to trust 'experts' who work for and/or are trained by, politicians who are funded by, and agencies whose brass come from the corporations who are raking in record liability-free profits from COVID and the shots?"

Do some research on a CIA program called "LifeLog", and everything about Facebook will become crystal clear.

Then ask yourself...would people still be willing to use Facebook, if they knew it's origin, and for what it was really designed for?

The answer is no, and the CIA knew that too, thus they had to find someone in the private sector to take over the project, and disguise its intentions. They didn't have to look far either. Apparently, their facility was right across the street from where Zuckerberg was going to school. Sounds like a conspiracy, but it's true.

The real question I ask myself is what Zuckerberg agreed to, in order to become the face of LifeLog aka Facebook? I'm sure it probably had something to do with signing a contract in his own blood.

The small people are in key positions in finance, education, religion & politics. Look for them in these areas stirring the pot. Jesus Christ warns us: Revelation 2:9 (KJV) I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and [I know] the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but [are] the synagogue of Satan.

John 8:44 (KJV) Ye are of [your] father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.

I have seen that big pharma, their media allies and corrupt political operatives continuously label Dr. Mercola and others that criticize the safety, effectiveness and necessity of "vaccines" as disinformation or conspiracy theory spreaders. I have never seen any of these critics of Mercola and people with similar concerns about mass vaccination actually refute scientifically what vaccine skeptics, many of them highly educated and accomplished immunologists and virologists, have to say about this scare tactic vaccination campaign. All they do is label not explain. Those critics of Mercola and others with similar views about vaccination also never mention natural immunity of those who have recovered from covid which is far superior to the artificial immunity conferred by vaccines. Now the emergence of "variants" and infection among the fully vaccinated is beginning to allow the light of truth to begin to shine through the bs.

And to be a terrorist, one needs not say a word or do anything, they just need to breath and think. Oops, I just emerged from my closet mind and emerged into the sunshine of exposed free speech terrorism. It is not free, it has a cost and the largest cost is fear, fear of being caught for thinking freely and using the basic human trait of expression. Oh, let me run and hide, they are coming. To be an American, it means not to fear. Fear is how they win. Living, that is enjoying each day that life does not get in the way of living. Enjoy each day, some get more days than others; but if they are not appreciated, what good are they? Fear is a non visible set of chains that hinder a slave from running. When you remove their fear chain, then you will be free and live each day to its fullest.

... and this is why I say, "Get off of social media completely!" (I did!) You really think that what you have to say won't be used against you later? Why hop on a platform that targets "dissidents" and post your views because you think they might matter when in fact, your comments only make you a target? Social media does not need us to participate. Families need us to participate. Open lines of communication on phones that are not "smart" need to be established and families need to work together and neighbors need to work together without the use of social media's promotional tools. If you don't care about making yourself a target, then just keep bitching and doing what you're doing on social media. Censorship comes in two forms: (1) being banned because of your comments; and (2) disappearing from your home in the middle of the night because you posted something threatening out of frustration at what's going on.
