

Stolen Elections

MICHAEL HERMAN JUL 18  2  4

My Take

Read →

4 Comments

Write a comment...

Michael Milner  Michael Milner 1d

So what do we do about it? We can't just roll over.

 LIKED (1)  REPLY (2)

Michael Herman 1d

Author

Mr. Milner,

I thought the solution was to vote. But therein lies the rub.

You wouldn't like the solution I'd have. Revolutions are a bloody affair.

If the Spencer Pratt nonsense in LA didn't cause the people to take the streets, I can way out.

We saw Canadians take a stand. Those truckers were de-banked, their licenses suspended, their insurance cancelled, and some were jailed. Turned into non-entities absent a way to a living. Rendered incapable of supporting themselves.

It really wouldn't be that hard, because after the sixth politician was hung, or ninth one, done away with, the rest would capitulate.

But even a sixty percent taxation and loss of all privacy the people are somnambulant.

We already rolled over.

Thanks for commenting. Greatly appreciate your reading and taking the time to pen your thoughts. Enjoy your weekend.

LIKED (2)

REPLY (1)

KundaliniAndCellTowers  KundaliniAndCellTowers 20h

Michael, thank you for this piece. Without honest and responsive representation is toast. Since the 1990s I have supported groups advocating for paper ballots and same day counting. Period. I think we brought in electronic voting systems from Europe in the 1990s. Even the liberal Democracy Now! program aired segments outlining vulnerabilities and "flaws" built into these systems. Electronic voting is inherently flawed. Why does it take states in the US three weeks to count their votes when third world countries can get it done in one day? Why does the US forbid independent foreign observers from evaluating US election integrity? Why, once electronic voting was established, did US corporate media no longer do exit polling, which used to be an accurate predictor of election results? Because they no longer are. Because the results are skewed after being cast. Because of all the reasons you outline. I did a quick search on election integrity and paper ballots, and it seems that most of the first page results are astroturf, attacking "election integrity denialism." As if Trump is the problem when he is just pointing out the obvious, something that we have known for four decades. (After the US lost its last civil war, I don't have a lot of hope. While I will continue to support what I believe to be right in small impact, peaceful actions; part of me hopes for a benevolent dictator, like Bukele in Nicaragua who singlehandedly zeroed out the gang inspired crime rate in his country; or Gaddafi in Libya who used oil revenue to provide free education, healthcare, raise the literacy rate from 10% to 90%, and empower broad participation of women in society. Sadly, since Gaddafi used gold to back his currency and did not play ball with the Bank of International Settlements, he had to go. There is a hidden hand that must be dealt with. Not sure how that will be done.

 LIKE  REPLY

Michael Herman 17h

Author

Outstanding commentary. So pleased to have your intelligent discourse. We know what Gaddafi did. And who did their bidding. And why.

Republicans party is lost to the hidden hand. Unless Tucker leads a third new party that is captured. Thanks for commenting.

 LIKED (1)  REPLY