Unvaxxed Study: Few Got Sick and ADHD Disappeared

Dr. Paul Thomas is a retired pediatrician from Portland, Oregon. He was forced to give up his medical license by the Oregon Medical Board because he published data about what he was observing in his patients—that the unvaccinated children were getting less sick compared to the vaccinated.

When Dr. Thomas decided to take a moderate approach with vaccinating children in his practice, he became well known in the Portland community. His book, "The Vaccine-Friendly Plan," offered an alternative vaccination schedule that focused on lowering the amount of aluminum a child was exposed to during vaccination. Aluminum is found in most pediatric vaccines and is a known neurotoxin.

"I was the only mainstream clinic that was allowing people to not vaccinate," Dr. Thomas told Frontline Health at the Children's Health Defence 2nd Annual Conference.

According to Dr. Thomas, when parents didn't want their child to follow the CDC vaccination schedule, most of the pediatricians in Portland said, "Sorry, you can't be here."

Many of these parents turned to Dr. Thomas.

This opened a unique perspective into the lives of children that were vaccinated and those who were not. Dr. Thomas decided to do a study on 3,324 children in his practice. He looked at their medical records over a long period of time to see what the data might reveal about the health outcomes for his patients.

And he only looked at the children that were born into his practice. This made sure that he could be certain about every single procedure and ailment that the child had.

The results were shocking, but Dr. Thomas managed to publish them in a peer-reviewed journal. His vaccinated patients had much worse health outcomes when it came to allergies, ADHD, asthma, and infections.

Within five days of publication, Dr. Thomas received a letter from his lawyer saying that his medical license was suspended. He was labeled as a "threat" to public health and his paper was retracted.

Join us on Frontline Health as Dr. Thomas shares how his stance on vaccines evolved over time and why he now cautions against his "vaccine-friendly plan."

When my mom was diagnosed with incurable, inoperable lung cancer that had metastasized into her lymph nodes, she was given only 6 months to live, and that was with chemo. My mom was a fervent believer in all things the medical establishment fed her but at that time, she asked me if there was anything out there that might help her. So I began researching and what I found was horrifying. The food industry and Big Pharma are killing us, all in the name of the almighty dollar. Our food is making us sicker and the pharmaceutical industry is capitalizing on that by prescribing drugs that only mask the issue, not cure it. Keep in mind, if you're healthy, Big Pharma isn't making any money. And children are now the biggest money making target. Our children are born with a dollar sign on their foreheads and that's a fact.

BTW, we changed a lot of things in my Mom's diet and she lived for an additional 14 years cancer free.

Cheers to Dr. Thomas for standing up for the kids.

Slowly but surely it is dawning upon Americans that they are being lied to on a daily basis about their health, diet, economy, and government.
