Britons are questioning the Government's bizarre rules about lovemaking - as sex in your home with someone from another household is banned, but technically it's okay in the garden.

New coronavirus regulation says no person may participate in a gathering which takes place in a public or private place indoors, and consists of two or more persons.

Now only those with 'reasonable excuses' are allowed to gather privately - and sex is not one of those reasons listed.

Social media users are now mocking the bizarre technicality that bars Britons from hooking up with people from other homes.

It comes as several lockdown restrictions were eased today, with primary schools reopening for reception, year one and year six.

Outdoor markets also reopened, along with car showrooms, while horse racing became the first sport to resume, though without spectators.

And vulnerable people who have until now been advised to stay indoors are now allowed to go outside for a work.

From today, groups of up to six people will be allowed to meet outside and even in private gardens in England as lockdown restrictions are relaxed.

Police will be keeping an eye on garden parties as the lockdown eases and will ask people to leave if they are breaching Boris Johnson's rules - but they cannot force them out of the property, it was revealed today.

Officers will be on the look out for groups of more than six people socialising together and will respond if two people from separate households are meeting for sex inside a property.

Britons are allowed to meet their friends for socially distant fun and games from today as the Government eases some of the lockdown restrictions in force since March.

Groups of up to six people from different households are allowed to meet socially or to play certain sports under a partial relaxing of previous rules which only allowed two people to meet.

'Half of Norfolk' would ignore the sex restriction, according to one Lord of the Rings fan

But as before, all the people involved must stay two metres away from each other if they do not live together, with other strict measures designed to limit risk during sports or at gatherings including barbecues.

And in one of the most controversial aspects of the new rules, Boris Johnson has introduced a ban on two people from different households meeting for sex.

A document from the National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC) and College of Policing said today: 'Rather than requiring a reasonable excuse to leave the place where a person is living, there are specific things that members of the public cannot do.

'A person may now leave and remain outside of the place where they live for any reason, subject to restrictions on gatherings and overnight stays.'

The guidance issued to officers on powers they have to police overnight stays said: 'You may only direct a person to return home.

'There are no powers in the Regulations to remove someone or use force. Fixed-penalty notices (FPNs) and arrest still apply, where appropriate.'

In public places 'direction, removal and/or use of force can still be used', the guidance said, adding: 'If you are lawfully in a private place you can only direct a prohibited gathering to disperse, or any person in the gathering to return home. FPNs and arrest still apply, where appropriate.'

Previously police chiefs told officers they have no powers to enforce the Government guidance on two-metre social distancing.

NPCC chairman Martin Hewitt said: 'Personal responsibility is key as we all enjoy these new freedoms.

'Police officers will still have a role if people are breaching regulations in place in England and Wales. We will continue to use common sense and discretion.

'Officers will engage, explain, encourage and, only as a last resort, enforce.'

How to have sex during the Covid-19 lockdown:

Harvard experts say couples from different houses should avoid kissing, wear masks and disinfect the bedroom to avoid spreading the disease

Having sex could spread the coronavirus - and only abstinence or masturbating are low risk, scientists have warned.

Doctors at Harvard University in Boston have ranked different sexual scenarios based on how likely someone is to catch the coronavirus.

The most risky was having multiple sexual partners from different households, while the least risky was avoiding sex until the virus has disappeared.

They admitted that abstaining from sex was 'not feasible for many' and that doctors should be prepared to discuss how to minimise the risk of patients catching Covid-19 during sex.

Avoiding kissing, wearing masks, and showering before and after sex could reduce the risk of catching the virus, they said.

While phone sex or sexting could be suitable for adults, the researchers warned it could lead to other problems such as blackmail, and that online sexual predation had increased during the pandemic.

In their study, published in the journal Annals of Internal Medicine, the team ranked sexual scenarios in the following order of risk:

sexual behaviour in the following order of risk:

1. Abstinence - No sexual contact of any kind. Behaviour adds no risk of infection, 'though unfeasible for many'.
2. Masturbation - 'Low risk for infection'.
3. Sexual activity on digital platforms - Low risk for infection but potential for online abuse, legal complications arising from screenshots, not suitable for minors because of the potential for abuse or illegality.
4. Sex with people within household - High risk of infection if partner catches the virus outside of the home.
5. Sex with people from other households - High risk of infection, especially if there are multiple partners.

The UK Government, as it lifted some strict lockdown rules today, clarified that any physical contact - including sex - with someone who you don't live with is still against the rules.

And a study of 900 adults in Britain found only four out of 10 have had sex since the start of lockdown, with young married couples most likely to have done so.

Researchers at Harvard University in Boston said abstinence (no sex) or masturbation were the lowest risk option, but that there were measures couples could take to try and prevent the spread of the virus, including wearing masks and avoiding kissing

Guidance issued by British officials today said: 'Close contact with people from other households means a much higher risk of transmission, and according to the scientific advice, we cannot safely allow people to see people they don't live with indoors without the risk that the virus will spread' indoors without the risk that the virus will spread.

'We recognise how difficult this is for people - particularly those who live alone and we are keeping this under constant review.'

Some users on Twitter joked that the rule seems only to apply to sex indoors - not outdoors.

But people are still prohibited from coming within two metres (6'6") of anyone who doesn't live in their household.

Researchers do not know yet whether the coronavirus can infect people from semen or vaginal fluids if someone has sex with a person infected with the virus. No studies have managed to prove the virus is present and infectious in sexual fluids.

The close contact inevitable in sex, however, means people would be at high risk of catching the virus when it was airborne or on a surface which both people touched.

Harvard experts, led by Dr Jack Turban, said in a paper aimed at doctors: 'Patient[s] should be counseled on the risk for infection from partners.'

Admitting that telling people not to have any sex was unlikely to work, the team suggested risk-reducing measures.

These measures included avoiding a partner if they had coronavirus symptoms, no kissing, or activities that involved contact with faeces, urine or semen.

They suggested couples could consider wearing masks, showering before and after sex, and disinfecting the area where they had sex afterwards.

Dr Jack Turban and colleagues said: 'Data are lacking regarding routes of sexual transmission.'

'Two small studies of SARS-CoV-2-infected people did not detect virus in semen or vaginal secretions...

'Moreover, these data are moot, given that any in-person contact results in substantial risk for disease transmission owing to the virus' stability on common surfaces and propensity to propagate in the [throat] and respiratory tract.'

SWISS BROTHELS CAN REOPEN AFTER SEX WORKERS LIST 'SAFE' POSITIONS THAT WON'T SPREAD COVID

Swiss brothels have been given the green light to open on June 6 as the country exits lockdown, with strict health rules including keeping your faces 'one forearm length apart' during sex.

Doggy style and reverse cowgirl are the two positions which would comply with the new rule - but threesomes are out and 'anal practices' will require gloves.

Anonymity is also a thing of the past because clients' personal details will have to be kept for four weeks in case they are needed for contact tracing.

Rules drawn up by a sex workers' group also call for masks to be worn if possible and bed sheets to be washed after each client departs to stop the spread of coronavirus.

Prostitution has been legal in Switzerland since 1942 and industry group ProKoRe has been lobbying the government to let it restart as soon as possible.

They said studies had suggested urine and faeces could be contaminated by the coronavirus but it wasn't clear if they were infectious.

Dr Turban and his colleagues said the public was almost certain not to follow a rule that tried to stop them from having sex.

They said: 'For the population at large, a recommendation of long-term sexual abstinence is unlikely to be effective, given the well-documented failures of abstinence-based public health interventions and their likelihood to promote shame.'

A survey by scientists at the universities of Anglia Ruskin, in Cambridge, and Ulster in Northern Ireland, found that only 39.9 per cent of Brits say they have been sexually active during lockdown.

The research showed six out of 10 people in the UK have not had sex for more than two months, since the strict social distancing rules were imposed.

Partners who do not live together have been driven apart by the rules, not allowed within 2m of one another unless they hastily moved in together after the announcement.

Younger married couples were the group most likely to still be sexually active, the study found.

The scientists said it was a concern

Their wish was granted when the Swiss health ministry put 'erotic business' on a list of activities which could resume on June 6.

ProKoRe has already drawn up an exhaustive list of rules to be distributed to individual brothels and agreed with sex workers.

'During sex, positions should be used in which the transmission of droplets is low,' the guidelines say, referring to the small particles thought to spread the virus.

'There will be no services with close facial contact. There must be a distance of at least one forearm length between the two people.'

The rules continue: 'Services involving two or more clients will not be offered.'

'Wearing a mouth and nose covering is recommended for all services. Anal practices will only take place with gloves.'

The rules also say that rooms used by prostitutes should be aired for at least 15 minutes between each encounter.

Bed sheets should be washed at 140F (60C) after each client has finished, and both the client and sex worker should ideally have a shower before and afterwards.

In addition, 'all clients are made aware that contact details will be recorded and kept for four weeks for the purpose of contact tracing'.

The guidelines also apply to sex

The scientists said it was a concern because regular sex can improve people's heart and brain health, as well as their mental wellbeing.

Dr Lee Smith said: 'When starting this research we expected there to be a high level of sexual activity while social isolating at home, but interestingly we found a very low level.

'This low level of sexual activity could be explained by people currently feeling anxious and stressed owing to the pandemic and not being in the mood to engage in the act.

'Moreover, those who are not married or cohabiting may not currently be able to meet up with their sexual partners and similarly those who use online apps to facilitate casual sex will currently not be able to do this.

'A lot of my previous research has shown that a frequent and trouble-free sex life is important for higher levels of enjoyment of life and general mental health, and this is particularly true for older adults.

'However, this study showed that older adults were less likely than younger adults to engage in sexual activity.'

Dr Lee's study was published in the Journal of Sexual Medicine.

The guidelines also apply to cars, which could have their numberplates recorded in order to ensure that infected clients can be tracked down later.

Since we are only supposed to be meeting people outside while keeping 2 metres apart I can't see how sex would be possible anyway so there would appear to be no need for a law against it.

By the time it takes for the average copper to get his ar se in to gear, get in his car, drive to yours. Park somewhere. Ring the doorbell. You answer the door (or not as the case may be) it would be all over anyway lol. Most of the people responding on here don't appear to have read the small print that accompanied this article yesterday stationer Boris has also said that the police will not have the power to enter anybodies house. So this is clearly unenforceable and probably the biggest breach of our human rights ever.

So new coronavirus regulation says no person may participate in a gathering which takes place in a public or private place indoors, and consists of two or more persons yet we can still enter supermarkets which are public places hosting 100s of strangers at any given moment. Well beau lux to that! We all know that government officials will be schlepping their sneaky little azzes across London to chase skirt whether its their mistress or some other random hook up. Why is this suddenly about sex? The law says you can only meet people from another household outside and while observing the 2 metre social distancing so effectively it has been impossible to have sexual relations with anyone you do't live with throughout the lockdown. Why do journalists (for want of a better word) always look for a sensationalist headline?

This has got to be the hugest violation of of people's rights. The government has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. Who is going to enforce these activities and how are they going to enforce them. Following people home they think are strangers going to have sex. Peeking in bedroom windows. Are cars okay to have sex with strangers. What about men and women who make their living from sex. I am not advocating men and women should but it is a huge industry.

Absolutely spot on!!! This is about control and is getting ridiculous. Meanwhile we all know certain government figures while be shlepping across London to slip one to the mistress.
